Mr. Coyle: I am sure I understood what you said, that you understand what my position is to be now. I am sorry I didn't make it clear.

The Court: I don't mean to be criticizing. It may be my fault.

Mr. Coyle: It seemed that our brief said that.

The Court: It may have.

Mr. Coyle: I wonder, though, if your Honor [fol. 2673] could possibly explain for my own benefit how you think that the proof that we are offering differs from the holding of the Supreme Court in Brown——

The Court: It is a big enough job for me to try to decide this case; for me to enter into that, I might be here a week and still not finish. I don't think I will attempt that.

Mr. Coyle: Another point raised, I think, was the statement that the record shows that the consumer will only drive up to three to five miles to purchase groceries.

I think the record showed that Von's and Shopping Bag consider the over-all draw area of its stores to be five miles; that the average customer in the Los Angeles metropolitan area is willing to drive for at least ten minutes about four miles in order to do grocery shopping; and that between 10 and 35 per cent of all customers of Von's and Shopping Bag stores come from outside the immediate trading area o fthe Von's-Shopping Bag store.

The Court: I don't think there is any dispute about the testimony. I think what I said was—I don't remember what I said, except that I believe I said that generally the area was three or four miles, three, four or five miles.

[fol. 2674] Mr. Coyle: A lot of customers come from outside that area. 10 to 37 per cent.

The Court: 10 to 37 per cent?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: For example, no one can tell me why a person would go to—let's say that you lived in a city where they had two Safeway stores and your house was located exactly halfway between the two stores, what do you think would prompt a person to pick one of the stores over the other Safeway store?

Mr. Coyle: Choosing between one or another of the Safeway stores?

The Court: Yes. Assuming that they are identically distant in miles and traffic signals and to get to and from.

Mr. Coyle: I suppose there would be so many variables, even in addition to those. It might be that the woman had a friend working in one of them, or she liked the produce display. I don't suppose both Safeway stores would be equal in their produce displays. Or she might—even though driving was almost the same, there were the same number of traffic lights, for some reason or another she would decide to go to one or the other.

The Court: There would be many, many reasons. [fol. 2675] It may be that when you asked the butcher to cut the meat thin, and he cut it thick, you took a dislike to him and went to the other place because he would cut it right. Is that right?

Mr. Coyle: Any number of things.

The Court: It is as variable as the whims and fancies of a human being. That's about the situation?

Mr. Coyle: I would think so.

Then I think the court raised the point that some evidence or some exhibit indicated that only six of the Shopping Bag stores were serving the same areas as the Von's store prior to——

The Court: I think I saw somewhere where there were six or seven, only those that were actually in competition with each other. Why? Do you disagree with that?

Mr. Coyle: I think Mr. Von der Ahe, or the defendant Von's in answering an interrogatory stated that seven of the Shopping Bag stores competed.

The Court: Let's take it at seven.

Mr. Coyle: There was additional evidence. One of the studies introduced by one of the defendant's expert witnesses indicated that there were four additional Shopping Bag stores that competed with Von's stores. And there was testimony that 20 of the existing Shopping Bag [fol. 2676] stores were located within ten minutes driving time or approximately four miles distance of the Von's stores.

The Court: I don't think that matter is too crucial in the case, frankly.

Mr. Coyle: I don't either, because we have this other stipulation, this other thing about the general competitive pattern.

The Court: It is the general competitive pattern which, as I understand it, is the thing that counts.

Mr. Coyle: I would agree with that, your Honor.

Another point that was raised was an exhibit proposed by —introduced by the defendants, which showed that in 1953 there were ten chains of more than ten stores, and that by 1962—I think it was 1962—there were 24 chains of ten or more stores. However, the exhibit also showed that during the same period of time the chains of four to nine stores declined from 30 chains to 22 chains. So basically this was chains of four to nine stores increasing into chains of ten or more stores. So there was a decrease in the number of chains of four to nine stores of eight, and an increase in the chains of ten or more stores of fourteen.

The Court: In the stipulation I notice—that is on page 2, [fol. 2677] paragraph 3—it says: "The following table shows the breakdown of the concerns operating in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in 1962."

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: There were ten or more—those with ten or more stores were 24, and four to nine stores 22.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Two to three stores 104.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: I suppose it is a natural inference that these are all growth situations. They didn't just start out with ten stores or nine stores.

Mr. Coyle: Except you do have this one factor; that the four to nine stores, as a matter of fact—incidentally, this stipulation came from one of the defendant's exhibits to which we have objection, so we didn't stipulate to the first half of the exhibit, that is, the 1953.

The Court: You had what objection? This is the first time I heard it.

Mr. Coyle: We raised objection when this exhibit——

The Court: Did you specifically point out to the court wherein it was objectionable?

Mr. Coyle: We have in these comments we made on [fol. 2678] their exhibits and testimony, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I am afraid in the normal course that isn't the way to make an objection, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: We objected at the time it was admitted, as to this exhibit, your Honor.

The Court: You did?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Did I rule on it?

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure.

The Court: I must have been out of the courtroom or something was wrong, because I don't remember.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, this was not an exhibit; it was the affidavit of Godfrey Lebhar in which all of these statistics were set forth.

I remember specifically handing that affidavit to your Honor separate and apart from all other affidavits and stating to your Honor that this is what I regarded as the most important expert witness testimony in the case.

I do not remember any objection to it.

Mr. Coyle: This man was deposed, your Honor. The deposition was introduced.

The Court: I know that. That is perfectly proper. But I just was wondering if you are now objecting to something that was not objected to during the time of [fol. 2679] the trial.

Mr. Coyle: It may be our position went to the weight.

The Court: I think that's what it did.

Mr. Coyle: At least we didn't want to stipulate as to this prior study for the year 1953, because we did have these questions of weight.

The Court: I understand your position in that regard.

Mr. Coyle: There is no question, also, that we do agree there has been an increase in the total number of chains in the area. We just couldn't agree that this man made an accurate count.

The Court: I understand that. I don't think there is any dispute in the increase in the number of chains, if you mean ten stores or more, or four to nine stores or more, or even his three stores.

Mr. Coyle: His figure showed the four to nine stores had gone down from 30 to 22.

The Court: Well, I haven't paid any attention to that, because there is no substantiation. But I notice that your ten or more store situation is 24.

Mr. Coyle: That is correct. The chains are growing. There are other exhibits in the record that indicate the growth of the chains.

[fol. 2680] The Court: Do you consider two or three stores a chain?

Mr. Coyle: It is a matter of terminology.

The Court: I know it is, that's why I am asking it.

Mr. Coyle: I would consider it a smaller chain, yes, your Honor. I wouldn't consider it one of the——

The Court: It is better to be bound, if I want to go free, by a small chain than a large chain; isn't that what you are saying?

Mr. Coyle: No. I am just saying it is a smaller chain. I consider two or three stores a chain.

The Court: Aren't these small, as you call them, chains an integral part of the competitive factors in the market?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: A very influential factor in the market, these two and three-store smaller chains?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Well, there are 104 of them in this relevant trade area.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, your Honor. I don't think we have any problem with respect to this.

I may not understand your Honor's point.

The Court: I think you do, and I think you have [fol. 2681] answered me. I believe you have.

Mr. Coyle: I was going to point out some of the other matters with respect to these chains.

In 1953 there were 704 chain grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and by 1962 the total number had increased to 1,085. In 1953——

The Court: Now, that includes of course the smaller two and three-store operation?

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

This next figure, then, in 1953 there were seven hundred —I am sorry—in 1953, chains of ten or more stores accounted for 57 per cent of all chain grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. And by 1962 they accounted for 68.2 per cent. That's about 11 per cent more, of all chains in the Los Angeles area. In 1953, the 40 chains with the most grocery stores operated 574 stores. By 1962 the 24 chains with the most grocery stores operated 739 stores. So you had 24 firms in 1962 operating more stores than the 40 largest chains, in terms of stores, operated in 1953. So you do have this more and more stores coming under fewer and fewer chains.

The Court: I suppose I am not supposed to weigh the benefits to the public, am I? It would be better to go back to the good old days when they kept the fish without [fol. 2682] ice, salt mackeral in the salt barrel, and the cheese out on the counter with a knife handy to cut it when you came in and a fly swatter. That's the old days. So that was the individual grocer as I remember him. Of course, he may have to stop while making change to swat a fly, and maybe even hit you.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think we have to choose between those alternatives in the context of a merger case. It would only stop a merger of two large chains; it wouldn't destroy either of the large chains. They would still be there if they didn't merge.

The Court: Of course, we haven't come to the time yet, but if I should rule in your favor there would have to be some kind of remedy, and I suppose what the Government would want would be to have them dispose of the stores that they had acquired. I suppose the purchaser, just as an aside for a moment—suppose the seller says, "I don't want them back," can I order him to take them back?

Mr. Coyle: The seller has long gone, your Honor. The seller is a dissolved corporation.

The Court: That's what I say. So when it comes to the relief time——

Mr. Coyle: Relief is a problem. But we will have to face it.

[fol. 2683] The Court: Would it be all right if Kroger came in and took them over, or what's the new concern that just came in?

Mr. Knight: Jewel Tea?

The Court: What was the new one—Kroger?

Mr. Coyle: Kroger, yes.

The Court: I am sure you would object to that, wouldn't you?

Mr. Coyle: I am sure we would, too. That would be a merger between Alpha Beta and——

The Court: Who is not in here that could come in? What national chain would be available to come?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know, your Honor. I am sure what we would ask would be to restore the status quo. Four years have elapsed. In other words, set up two separate chains.

The Court: Who would operate the other one—the Government?

Mr. Coyle: We would have to face that problem. I am sure that our position on relief—we couldn't answer in a vacuum—our position on relief would be realistic. It would have to be.

The Court: I suppose in these cases, according to what the Supreme Court indicates, you should decide the question of [fol. 2684] legality first, and then get out your charts and pencils and try to find out what to do next.

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: In other words, build a scaffold and then locate the man to hang.

Mr. Coyle: No. I think you should find out whether it is legal or illegal transaction.

The Court: I agree with you that it has to be decided. You don't think the court should give any consideration at this time to what should be done or could be done?

Mr. Coyle: No, I don't, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

I think somewhere along the line in this world of ours today we are going to have to wake up and become realistic, work out some kind of a system that at least requires if a company is going to merge, require notice to be given to someone, and then at least have a hearing, before waiting until this time and then attacking the concern and leaving people with all the financial problems, the tax problems that exist.

You wouldn't unwind the tax problem here for the next 25 years in this situation. I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see them in the courts for the next, at least ten years, over tax problems.

[fol. 2685] Mr. Coyle: I can't really answer this in a vacuum. There might be an easy way to divest. I don't know. I will have to look into it.

The Court: I guess we don't consider that now. But I couldn't help having it run through my mind.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure we have to face this problem ourselves. The unfortunate thing is that there have been so few final litigations thus far. It takes so long to get them litigated.

The Court: As I said before, probably the original jurisdiction ought to be in the Supreme Court on these cases. It would save a lot of wear and tear, wouldn't it? It would on me, I will tell you.

Mr. Coyle: This is one of the few cases where we intervened prior to the acquisition.

The Court: Of course I am in this situation, counsel: You will recall—I believe one of our judges, Judge Mathes, had this case, and I think he had the hearing on the matter originally, and, of course, in all fairness to him, this, too, was before the Brown Shoe case came down.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, your Honor.

The Court: What effect that may have had on Judge Mathes I can't say. But he certainly acted, and acted after [fol. 2686] a hearing, and then the parties proceeded to go forward. I have forgotten when it was that the Brown Shoe case came down. What date was it?

Mr. Coyle. June 25, 1962.

The Court: And I think Judge Mathes acted in 1960, or was it '61?

Mr. Coyle: 1960; March 28, 1960.

The Court: Then I believe the case was transferred to another judge, this is because of the condition of the calendar here, and finally it landed with me, and here it is.

Mr. Coyle: The only other matter that I think is listed, at least in my listing of the questions that the court raised, is I think Government's Exhibit 36, which is one of the Marshall exhibits, State Board of Equalization exhibits. This exhibit showed that there were 119 multiple outlet openings in 1960, and 128 single outlet openings.

The Court: I have made so many notes, counsel, that they are almost as voluminous as the record in the case, so I have to go back and find it. I wrote that down somewhere.

At any rate, go ahead. I wrote those figures down.

Mr. Coyle: I just want to point out that the same series [fol. 2687] of exhibits—this is a series of exhibits prepared by the State Board of Equalization—it shows that there were many more closings by single outlet firms than by multiple outlet firms; and other exhibits show that of the 29 stores obtaining permits to open—of the firms obtaining permits to open stores doing two million or more a year business, of the 29 of those permits, 18 were taken by the ten largest chains and 7 by the next ten largest chains. Which means 25 out of the 29 were taken by the 20 largest chains.

Exhibit 39 in this same series shows that the bulk of the discontinuances of permits—I mean 77 per cent of all dis-continuances of permits during this period was by the stores doing under $500,000 a year.

The Court: Counsel, I wonder if it enters into this picture—I don't believe there was any evidence, but I think one has to use some common sense in these things, now we are living in an age where the whole trend is toward volume, as I mentioned here before, everything is volume, even if you are losing money. Volume. Well, if you are going on the theory of volume, low prices—this is not new, this was even advocated during the days of the NRA, the idea was to increase the efficiency of the workers, increase the volume and to lower the prices. And generally speaking this is sound business, because if you can run a [fol. 2688] concern and do a hundred million dollars a year business gross volume and make a million dollars profit, why, you are still in business, but if you do one million dollars, you cannot make anything like a million dollars, on a ratio of 1 per cent. 1 per cent on a million dollars is practically nothing. These concerns, I am afraid, are largely running on volume.

I think there was some testimony, maybe it was from Mr. Von der Ahe, I think I asked him the question, what was considered in the business today the going earnings, what they considered coming out with. If I remember correctly I think he said around 2 per cent. I think his concern did a little better than that, if I recollect. But I am sure around 2 per cent on volume is about what the average would be.

Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Alsup: You are correct, your Honor. I think he testified that his percentage was 2.2. Most of the chains actually are between 1 and 2 percent.

The Court: That's what I thought.

Mr. Alsup: There are studies which indicate the single store operators do get a higher percentage, because they don't have the overhead.

The Court: They have to. That's what I am pointing to, they have to because of lack of volume. Sometimes this [fol. 2689] results in them having to get a little better price. So it may be that that is one of the features that enters into this competitive situation. Although it is hard for me to believe that a person—I guess it is true, though, the old saying is that some of the housewives will spend five dollars in gas and oil and wear and tear to save ten cents.

Mr. Coyle: It is also probably a fact, as one of the defendant's witnesses said—we quote from him in our brief—even though the chains might not be selling for less money than the independents, housewives think they are and for that reason they go to the chains. They just have that consumer image.

The Court: This image business has come into vogue in the last few years, and I guess it is nothing but advertising.

Mr. Coyle: That's right, your Honor.

The Court: So if we are going to believe advertising, we can be influenced to most anything.

I remember, even, when one of the cigarette companies was advertising that cigarettes would aid digestion.

Maybe some people believe it. I can't conceive of it. But I think it is possible, I guess.

Mr. Coyle: I think this pretty well answers your questions.

[fol. 2690] The Court: One thing we accomplished, counsel. I think I more fully comprehend now exactly your position.

Before you leave the lectern I would appreciate it if you could restate exactly the same statement you made just a little while ago. Did you write that down?

Mr. Coyle: I didn't. But I think we said it in our brief.

The Court: I don't think you said it quite in that fashion, because I read your brief. Give me the page so I can re-read it. I will need to re-read it.

Mr. Coyle: I will have to find it. I think if you look at pages 11 and 12 of our brief, which we filed last Friday, our memorandum dated March 19, 1964, and entitled Government's Memorandum on the Issues Presented——

The Court: I have it before me. That was filed March 20th, I believe.

Mr. Coyle: It was dated March 19th.

The Court: That's right.

Mr. Coyle: Start at page—line 28, page 11.

"This merger united under one control and management two of the largest and most important separate competitive entities in the relevant market area. It ended"—

[fol. 2691] The Court: Let's stop there. Let's assume that to be true for the purposes of this discussion. Now go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: "It ended the independent existence of an expanding chain of 38 supermarkets with annual sales in excess of $84,000,000."

The Court: I don't know whether that is true or not. Because the evidence showed, as I recollect, that there was some concern about the progress of that company. You are speaking now of Shopping Bag?

Mr. Coyle: That's correct.

The Court: There was some evidence of the owner that he was concerned about that the volume was increasing but the profits were not.

Mr. Coyle: But they were still making profits.

The Court: Counsel, making a profit is one thing, but—it is like the talk about inflation, you hear every day, and I notice it even in some of the fine writers, saying that stocks are a hedge against inflation. Well, there is nothing that could be more erroneous, because they are not a hedge against inflation, unless the earnings are increasing. If your volume is increasing and your profits are not increasing, it is usually a bad sign. Something is wrong.

Mr. Coyle: This statement says: "It ended the independent existence of an expanding chain of 38 super- [fol. 2692] markets with annual sales in excess of $84,000,000."

The Court: Right. But what I am talking about is the interpretation of expanding. You know you can expand—it is like a balloon, you expand it and it comes to a point where it pops.

Mr. Coyle: There was no evidence that I know of that this was near the popping——

The Court: No, no. But there was evidence in the case that the management was concerned about the progress of the company.

Mr. Coyle: They would have to jack up the management then.

Mr. Coyle: That is not easily done. You can't just call a coffee break and do that. You have to get the management.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure it wouldn't be a defense in a Section 7 case to say that, "This looked like the best business step for us to take."

I think the defense would have to be a lot tighter than that.

The Court: We start out on ice and end up on water. I am not saying it is a defense. I am merely pointing out to you in connection with this expanding situation, there was evidence to the effect that this expansion was creating concern with the management, because the profits were [fol. 2693] not accompanying the expansion of the volume. That's all I am pointing out.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: These economic factors are things that I think the court should consider and have the experience to consider. But I am afraid too often they are not considered.

Mr. Coyle: I think you have to look at the history of the corporation. It seems to me, as I remember it—I don't have all the exhibits before me—as I remember it, the history of the corporation was that its profits hit an all-time high in 1958. That's Shopping Bag. There was a strike in 1959. Their profits went down. Their profits were also down in '60. I think that's the fact. It may be that the profits hit an all-time high in '57, went down in '58, went down further in '59, which was the strike year; but this was not a firm that had much of a history of decline in profits.

The Court: I am not saying they had a history of decline in profits. Who was the man who testified, what was his name?

Mr. Alsup: Mr. W. D. Hayden, former president, your Honor. W. R. Hayden.

Mr. Coyle: He served an affidavit and——

The Court: Counsel, let's not be too technical. The affidavit, which is considered here, is testimony, and [fol. 2694] that's what I read, in which he said that he was concerned about the progress of the company. That's all. It isn't a decisive point, but it is one of the economic factors that is apparently skimmed over in these cases. You can increase volume and go broke. You probably won't remember, but one of the great companies of America, one of the truly great packing companies of America, lost a million dollars a day for 90 days back years ago, and it was at the top of the ladder in distribution of meat products. What do you think happened to the company? The volume may not have decreased, but they made the wrong buys at the wrong time. They went broke.

You are probably surprised to hear that a company would lose a million dollars a day for 90 days.

Mr. Coyle: That's a lot of money.

The Court: I would say it is considerable. Go ahead.

The first part we agree, I think for the purposes of discussion, that the statement is true. The second part I am merely pointing out a variable that might come into play.

Mr. Coyle: Then on line 32:

"It increased concentration and resulted in a single corporation controlling 8.9 percent of all retail grocery distribution in the economically signficant Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

[fol. 2695] The Court: I don't think there is any dispute on that.

Mr. Coyle: Then, following, the next paragraph. I suppose we should skip the first sentence, because that's argument. Then starting line 4, page 12—

The Court: Here is the whole statement of your case, it is coming right now, that's right.

Mr. Coyle: "A merger of this magnitude, occurring in this market, which has a definite history of prior mergers and increasing concentration, cannot be reconciled with amended Section 7."

The Court: We understand each other thoroughly. That's your case. In other words, you are saying that because this is—whatever "magnitude" means—that because of a merger of this significance, magnitude, that it is inconsistent with and the Act was intended to stop it.

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: I think I fully understand your case and I am much better off in the understanding, but I have not yet made up my mind.

Mr. Coyle: Maybe the brief is not clear.

Then we undertake, after that, to discuss, and we think rebut these various matters that——

The Court: I have been all over that, counsel.

I suppose we ought to take a recess. How much [fol. 2696] time do you want? Will we be able to finish by 4:00 o'clock?

Mr. Alsup: I think we will.

I think in response to the court's question I sounded smug and complacent. It came out differently than I intended. I certainly have been around enough in these economic matters that you can't be smug and complacent, and that's true in any lawsuit. But I don't think we will need more than a half hour to an hour, your Honor.

The Court: All right. We will take——

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I would like to call attention to the quotation from Judge Hand in the Aluminum Company case, which occurs in Footnote 28 of Brown Shoe. It says:

> "Throughout the history of these antitrust statutes it has been constantly assumed that one of their purposes was to perpetuate and preserve for its own sake, and in spite of possible cost, an organization of industry in small units which can effectively compete with each other."

The Court: Well, with all due respect to Judge Learned Hand, he was indeed a great judge, but I can't understand how he gets the privilege to decide that this country should be cut up in small units.

Mr. Coyle: I think he was saying that Congress had decided.

[fol. 2697] The Court: Frankly, I don't think Congress has intended that. And maybe I am in error. Maybe the Supreme Court will say entirely differently.

I don't think it is so much a question of small or large, necessarily. It is a question of what is the competitive situation, what effect? Is it probable that it is going to suppress the competition, which in turn results for the benefit of the public, the consumer?

Mr. Coyle: We can't get over to making the public benefit the test. That is the Sherman Act when you get over there.

The Court: Do you think I have to eliminate that entirely from this case? If it develops in this case from all the evidence that it was absolutely certain beyond per-adventure of a doubt that a combining of two concerns would result in great betterment to the competitive situation, that I still would have to rule that it was contrary to Section 7 of the Clayton Act?

Mr. Coyle: If it developed in this case that a merger of great benefit to the public also would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, you would have to rule that it violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

The Court: Counsel, you have added on to my question. What I am trying to says is, let's assume that two [fol. 2698] companies—let's take another field where there are not so many. Let's say some field such as the sale of bread, that two companies got a hold of 50 per cent of the bread in this community, and the evidence showed clearly that it was redounding to the benefit of the bread eaters of this community to such an extent that prices were reduced, that distribution was aided, that the quality of the bread was increased, that the public's benefits were greatly increased—now, 50 per cent is certainly an enormous part of the market, isn't it?—would you be able to say just from the 50 per cent alone that that would be contrary to the proscribed things in Section 7?

Mr. Coyle: You would also have to look at the market structure——

The Court: The competitive situation?

Mr. Coyle: But the consideration would be whether the merger would or might lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly; not whether it would benefit the public.

The Court: I understand that. But, counsel, you veer off every time I use the words "competitive situation." The purpose of these laws is to keep virile and vigorous competition, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: To prevent concentration that might destroy competition.

The Court: I think the Congress was trying to [fol. 2699] make one step beyond the Sherman Act, of course, and trying to say here where it becomes clear that there is a possibility—not a possibility, but a probability that there is going to be a substantial lessening of competition, then the courts should act. But I am wondering if inherent in that whole definition, which is not a very clear-cut definition, is the competitive situation.

What was the competitive situation when this case was being tried, and prior to that time, what was the competitive situation, and what did this merger do to the competitive situation? If it increased competition, you certainly would say it was not in violation of the Clayton Act, is that right?

Mr. Coyle: I would have to retreat, to resort to the statement we just read from our brief, that if the factors which we rely upon in our brief occur, the probability is that this merger will lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. When we meet that burden of proof, we—

The Court: Suppose the court concludes from all the testimony that it is not probable that this merger would substantially reduce competition, but on the contrary from all of the evidence it indicated that it might increase, substantially increase the competition in the relevant trade area; now, assuming that that factually could be sustained, wouldn't I be compelled to rule against you?

[fol. 2700] Mr. Coyle: I think that the two alternatives are really alternatives. If the court could conclude from all the testimony that competition would not be lessened, then we would not have established the other points that we allege in our brief.

The Court: That's what I am saying exactly.

Mr. Coyle: But I think that we would lose, not because of what the other side put in, but we would lose because of our failure to make our proof as to those elements which we have in our brief, and which we just read into the record.

The Court: What I am saying, it seems to me, Mr. Coyle —I think I fully understand you now, and I think that your statement was probably even more clearcut than that enunciated in your brief on page 12, which begins at line 4. But I think that carries the message, as they say in patent law, that has the teaching of your case in that one sentence. That is, a merger of this magnitude occurring in this market, which has a definite history of prior mergers and increasing concentration, a fortiori violates the Act. Right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. Of course that embodies, also, this other paragraph, line 28 through line 2, starting on page 11.

The Court: But this is the teaching of your theory right [fol. 2701] here, isn't it?

Mr. Coyle: I would say the two paragraphs, your Honor.

The Court: Which paragraph is that?

Mr. Coyle: Starting on page 11, line 28.

The Court: Oh, yes. We have taken that for this discussion to be true.

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: But this is really the theory of your case right here, beginning on line 4, "A merger of this magnitude"—is that right?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, sir. I would say both paragraphs, but I think we are quibbling.

The Court: We will take a recess until 3:30.

(Recess taken.)

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE DEFENDANTS

The Court: All right, counsel. Let's see. You are Mr.——

Mr. Vaughn: Vaughn.

The Court: I believe that's correct.

Mr. Vaughn: Judge Carr, there is one aspect to the government's argument, which was repeated on many occasions, and which they ended up on, as a matter of fact, that I think is worthy of comment, and that is the test that the government seems to think is applicable in a Section 7 case. That test has been repeated by the government on [fol. 2702] several occasions and seems to have to do with the fact that these are two substantial concerns in an economically significant market area. In that connection I would like to invite the court's attention to Footnote 38 in the Brown Shoe opinion, which reads in part as follows:

> "Statistics reflecting the shares of the market controlled by the industry leaders and the parties to the merger are, of course, the primary index of market power; but only a further examination of the particular market—its structure, history and probable future—can provide the appropriate setting for judging the probable anti-competitive effect of the merger."

The Court: What is that page, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: Again, I have the Law Edition, I am sorry to say——

The Court: That's all right. I will find it.

Mr. Vaughn: Footnote 38. And the court, also in that connection, had of course said that each merger had to be functionally viewed in the context of its particular industry, and an industry that had to be by necessity unique in every case.

In that same footnote and right after the sentence which I have just quoted, the court cites, with apparent [fol. 2703] approval, Pillsbury Mills, a case decided by the Federal Trade Commission.

I think there is some very significant language in that decision, which I would like to read to the court.

The Court: Before we do, let's take a moment. Let me re-read what you just read. I have read it before but just one second.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Vaughn: In Pillsbury Mills the Federal Trade Commission states as follows:

> "Competition cannot be directly measured; No single set of standards can be applied to the whole range of American industry. No single characteristic of an acquisition would of itself be sufficient to determine its effect on competition. For this reason it would not be sufficient to show that an acquiring and an acquired company together control a substantial amount of sales, or that a substantial portion of commerce is affected."

The court, then, or the Commission then has a Footnote No. 29, and that footnote reads as follows:

> "The attorneys supporting the Complaint suggest the following test for Section 7 cases."

[fol. 2704] Parenthetically, this is the test which the Commission rejects, and which in this case the court in Brown Shoe refers to. Here is the test which the government suggested:

> "Where a leading factor in the relevant market having a substantial share of that market, acquires another factor in that market also having a substantial share of that market, the inference arises that competition may be substantially lessened in the lines of commerce involved."

That was the test rejected in Pillsbury.

To my thinking it is the same line that the government is suggesting to the court in this case.

The Court: By the way, let's see what is the date of the case and who was on the Supreme Court.

Mr. Vaughn: This case was decided in 1955. It was cited with approval in Brown Shoe in 1957, which—I beg your pardon—1962.

The Court: That was 1955?

Mr. Vaughn: That was decided in 1955.

The Court: What is the citation?

Mr. Vaughn: Federal Trade Commission——

The Court: I have it right here. But I mean the Supreme Court ruled on that, didn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: No. This was never taken to the Supreme Court. The Pillsbury case was decided within the [fol. 2705] Federal Trade Commission and never got any further. But, as I pointed out, it was cited with apparent approval in the Brown Shoe opinion, suggesting that this mathematical test which the government suggests, which is really no more than just a per se test, is rejected by the Supreme Court.

The Court: That's the question. That's the trouble here.

Let's go now and refer to what brings us to Footnote 38. It says—may I just read that?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

The Court: Quoting on page 322 of the U. S. Reports. It says:

> "That is, whether the consolid. 'ion was to take place in an industry that was fragmented rather than concentrated, that had seen a recent trend toward domination by a few leaders or had remained fairly consistent in its distribution of market shares among the participating companies, that had experienced easy access to markets by suppliers and easy access to suppliers by buyers or had witnessed foreclosure of business, that had witnessed the ready entry of new competition or the erection of barriers to prospective entrants, all were aspects, varying in importance with the merger under consideration, which would properly [fol. 2706] be taken into account."

That is one of the statements in the case that I, without directly referring to it, have been talking about. All of these factors. Then Footnote 38. I hadn't placed much emphasis on the Pillsbury case, but I do note, as you point out, that they do cite it, and in so doing they say:

> "Subsequent to the adoption of the 1950 amendments, both the Federal Trade Commission and the courts have, in the light of Congress' expressed intent, recognized the relevance and importance of the economic data that places any given merger under consideration within an industry framework almost inevitably unique in every case."

I don't know just what that means. Then going on:

> "Statistics reflecting the shares of the market controlled by the industry leaders and the parties to the merger are, of course, the primary index of market power; but only a further examination of the particular market—its structure, history and probable future—can provide the appropriate setting for judging the probable anti-competitive effect of the merger."

[fol. 2707] Well, this is, without knowing it, what I have been talking about. I didn't realize it. I remember now having read it. Maybe I got the germ of thought there.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. It seems to me, if I may, that the Government has isolated just a few factors, not all of them, and has erected a per se test based on those factors, which is precisely the test that was rejected in the Pillsbury case.

The Court: I don't know whether the words "per se" fit it, or not, but it comes somewhere in that area that the Government—as I understand Mr. Coyle, he is saying that on the assumption—I think for the purposes of the argument we conceded that the merger did unite under one control and management two of the largest and most important separate competitive entities in the relevant market area. I don't think you dispute that, do you?

Mr. Vaughn: No.

The Court: There we jump over to the next step, and that is: "A merger of this magnitude, occurring in this market"—you notice the word "this" in both cases—"which has a definite history of prior mergers"—and there certainly is a history of prior mergers here—"and increasing concentration"—I think there is some increasing concentration——

Mr. Vaughn: I think I would take, maybe, some exceptions to the Government's position with respect to those.

[fol. 2708]

The Court: Maybe as to degree, but I am talking about there has been some concentration. What brought it about there is great dispute.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor. And I think there is some dispute as to whether or not there is concentration.

The Court: Then it says: ". . . cannot be reconciled with amended Section 7."

So in some respects it almost amounts to a per se test.

Mr. Vaughn: I think so, your Honor.

And I would like to return to the question of increasing concentration and the mergers in this market, but I would next like to point out to your Honor that the Philadelphia Bank case, following the Brown Shoe case, did seem to erect a near per se test in cases where there was what the court called an undue market share controlled by the two companies that had merged. And in that particular case they seem to indicate that unless there was some mitigating factors, some clear evidence to the contrary, that a 30 per cent market share would violate the Act.

The Court: Did they say 30 per cent?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, they did.

[fol. 2709]

The Court: The share there was 36 per cent.

Mr. Vaughn: They went on to say, however, that the test applied in Philadelphia Bank and applicable to the facts in Philadelphia Bank lightens the burden of proving illegality only with respect to mergers whose size makes them inherently suspect, in light of Congress' design in Section 7 to prevent undue concentration.

[fol. 2710]

The Court: As a matter of fact, I think I made a note of that when I read the case.

Mr. Vaughn: So unless this case is one inherently suspect, or involves undue concentration, Philadelphia Bank really isn't applicable here. And I suggest to your Honor that a case involving 8 per cent market share does not have those characteristics, and I would like to refer to the decision of the three-judge court, consisting of Judges Pope, Sweigert and Zerpoli in United States vs. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, recently decided. That was a bank merger case of which your Honor is aware, I am sure. In that case the court said, after discussing Philadelphia Bank and the percentages involved there:

> "Here, in contrast, the proposed merger bank, Crocker-Citizens would have but 9.7 per cent of the deposits in the relevant area and 9.3 per cent of the loans and discounts. As the above figures indicate, the increase in Crocker-Anglo's percentage of deposits, now 7.2 per cent, would be only 2.5 per cent through the addition of the deposits of Citizens. In view of these statistics, and in view of the size and extent of the other banks listed in the foregoing tabulation, there can be no inherent likelihood that competition [fol. 2711] will be substantially lessened, for it is readily obvious that the merger will not produce a bank controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and will not result in a significant increase in the concentration of banks in that market . . ."

If 9.7 per cent is not——

The Court: I have forgotten; is that one of the cases on appeal?

Mr. Vaughn: It is not. This is a decision on a motion for a preliminary injunction to prohibit the merger.

The Court: What happened to the case finally, what is its progress?

Mr. Coyle: It is still pending. No appeal was taken on the preliminary injunction. We appealed one preliminary injunction, and the court found it didn't have jurisdiction over a preliminary injunction, so we didn't appeal the Crocker-Anglo.

Mr. Vaughn: It seems to me, then, in light of those decisions, they form a framework that we might well apply to this case, and it seems to me that this is not an appropriate case for the sort of per se test that was used in Philadelphia Bank. It is one where all of the economic factors must be considered, where the government cannot just take a few isolated factors and throw them in here and say this causes a violation; but, instead, must go ahead [fol. 2712] and meet their burden by showing all of the economic facts which actually demonstrate a reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition. And I submit, your Honor, that they have utterly failed to introduce any proof beyond the few considerations that they have placed before your Honor, which would show this lessening, and I don't believe those considerations show any lessening of competition. They don't show any competitor who went out of business by reason of this merger.

The Court: They don't have to show that, of course.

Mr. Vaughn: That is only one thing that they could possibly have shown that they did not show. They have not shown any members of the public——

The Court: The evidence is no different from any other case. It may be more difficult, but you still are required to show by the evidence produced in court that there is a probability of substantial lessening of competition.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor, I believe that's so.

The Court: Now, the question is whether or not the government has proved that in this case.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree with that wholeheartedly, and I also would submit to your Honor that they could not. The government has talked about——

The Court: Before you move on, counsel, I would like [fol. 2713] to ask you, if it won't hurt your argument any; I am sure it won't, any more than it did Mr. Coyle's——

Mr. Vaughn: I invite your Honor's questions.

The Court: You asserted at one time in this argument that you felt that the competition, the competitive situation, had increased. I would like for you to more or less give me a little further information of what your thinking is on that.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that I said that I thought that competition had increased since the merger. I don't necessarily attribute that to the merger. Although I will state one basis on——

The Court: Never mind whether it it attributable to the merger. Since the merger, I am talking about the date of 1960, while this suit has been pending, what can you point out to me that would indicate, from the evidence of course, that this situation instead of substantially lessening competition, or the probability of lessening it, it has in fact increased it?

Mr. Vaughn: Let's take the one thing I can think of that is perhaps directly attributable to the merger. There is testimony in the record that as a result of the merger the Shopping Bag Stores, which are still competing in the individual communities where they are located, have actually been upgraded, they are better competitors now.

[fol. 2714] That is reflected in the testimony of several witnesses.

I think that——

The Court: You had better watch out, counsel; you may say now that they are such powerful competitors that they are running the other people out of business.

Mr. Vaughn: I don't think they are. They are making the other people run a little faster.

There is no evidence in this record that a single store next to Shopping Bag, or within shopping distance of a Shopping Bag store, has gone out of business or has lost a nickel. There is no evidence as to that. And I know of no information indicating that. But it may be that that is one function of the merger, that it has increased competition in that it has upgraded the Shopping Bag Stores as competitors.

I am completely convinced that the independent can outcompete a chain. I have heard it said so many times, I have seen it reflected in these affidavits, and I have seen the reasons why they can, that I am absolutely convinced, as Mr. Von de Ahe said, that if he wanted to make—that many chain executives, as your Honor has noted, have gone out of their high-paying jobs to open up a grocery store, always in competition with a chain, and have succeeded——

The Court: I don't know how high the pay was. Maybe that was one of the inducements.

[fol. 2715] Mr. Vaughn: I always go back to Mr. Goldstein who was the executive vice president and general manager of Food Giant. He saw that chain rise, from 1958 to 1962, from 19 stores to 59 stores or 52 stores. Shortly after he left they added seven more. He must have been making pretty good money, I don't know what is was, but he went out and he took a Food Giant store that was bound to lose money in competition with a brand spanking new Von's Store right across the street, and he took that opportunity to get back into the retail grocery business, and he says that he has made as much money, if not more, than Food Giant ever made out of that store long before the brand spanking new Von's Store that was put across the street.

I am convinced that any chain operation is not as efficient and cannot really keep up with an experienced, able, hard-working independent who has greater flexibility, who has greater control of his business, who can charge the same prices, because he can buy as cheap, if not cheaper than any chain, and who can afford to his customers that magic ingredient, which not being in the grocery business I don't fully understand, this magic ingredient of personal touch which seems to attract customers, and which all of these retailers say is the secret to their success.

The Court: Counsel, there isn't any doubt about it, but the personal touch can be important, and it sometimes dis-[fol. 2716] appears from the chain operation.

For example, I remember driving into a filling station, I believe it was down in Alabama, where I have never seen such service in my life. You felt like you didn't want to leave the station. The thing was in absolute white, it was clean, I have never seen such a clean place in my life, I have never seen such efficiency and such courtesy, and I noticed that they had 40 pumps, and I thought to myself how can—it was in Mobile—how can a concern run a station like this and make money? So I asked one of the chaps what was the secret. He said, "The secret is that the boss is over here about 12 hours a day and if somebody doesn't live up to the standards, he is fired immediately." But, he said, "The people come from far and wide here to get this service, because we will do everything, even wash their car if it is necessary, to get their business."

So I do admit that the personal service angle is great. But, on the other hand, a person has to have a volume if he has a big store, to meet the expenses, to pay the help and the costs, and to still make enough money to consider himself as having a good living wage. Isn't that right?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, your Honor. It seems to me that these independents are proving that it can be done. [fol. 2717] The Court: Some of them are, I think, but not all.

Mr. Vaughn: As long as some of them are, if there are some who are making money in the grocery business, who are successful, who are able to expanded their businesses, add new stores, then it is quite obvious, it seems to me, that it can be done.

Now there are some——

The Court: I think that perhaps that does follow, counsel, that the proof that some reasonable number have done it tends to show that it is not just some one exceptional person that is doing it.

Mr. Vaughn: That's right. And it is the people with training and experience and ability, and who are willing to work hard. I imagine it is hard work in that grocery store if you have to get down to the early produce market at 6:00 o'clock in the morning and your store doesn't close until 9:00. That's hard work.

The Court: Any man that loves work will usually make a success, counsel, but they are coming fewer all the time, those that love work.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that the grocery business over the years has attracted a lot of people who are not competent, not able, not experienced.

I would like to read you just a little something, one sentence from the affidavit of W. R. Hayden who started [fol. 2718] this business with one little store and developed the Shopping Bag chain.

"Ambition and money are not enough to succeed in the grocery business, or in any other business, in my opinion. The principal requirement is sound management."

The Court: I think you have to have sound management, but usually if a person has money and ambition, he has the prerequisites to work, and work is the secret of most everything.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree with that wholeheartedly.

The Court: The great lawyers who talk about their great ability, it comes from work. The great surgeons, the great businessmen, I think you will find in 99 cases out of a hundred that they were hard workers, long hours and devotion to work.

Mr. Vaughn: The grocery business has traditionally been one that was fairly easy to get into. Your Honor will recall the instance of the young man 24 years old, his name was Lester Eaton, he was a witness for the government, after working six months in a grocery store he bought it for $1,000. That's all he had in the world, was a thousand dollars. Now, he happened to be ambitious and intelligent, an able young man. Within a few years he had bought a plot of ground across the street with the profits he had made out of the grocery store for the sum of $30,000, on [fol. 2719] which he plans to build a supermarket.

It was easy to get into the business for this young man, and he will no doubt be a great success. There are others for whom it is just as easy, who aren't going to be successful, who aren't going to be as able or as experienced, and they are going to lose out. And perhaps this is the reason for the decline in certain grocery stores.

The Court: This young man, as I remember, had worked in a grocery store first.

Mr. Vaughn: He worked for six months in the grocery store he bought.

The Court: That isn't too much time.

Mr. Vaughn: Maybe he was lucky and he worked awfully hard. And I think probably he did. But there are others who aren't going to work that hard.

In any competitive business—I would be surprised if there was any competitive business in which there were no failures. That is just one consistent with the idea of competition.

The Court: Well, a lot goes into making a choice of location, picking the right area, the right community, and most of that comes from previous experience. A man who has been in the grocery business long enough may come from Timbuctoo, but he knows what brings people into a grocery store. And the same bee that eats the same honey [fol. 2720] in Africa or Asia will probably eat the same honey here. The question is that experience teaches you how to be in the right place to meet those customers and serve them. So experience has a lot to do with it.

[fol. 2721] I think one of the things that stands out in this case is the fact that these people who have gone out from these operations and have made successes have done so mainly because they have had great experience in the business.

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, I think that's right.

The Court: I don't think it is to be expected that someone who has absolutely no experience should be able to open up a grocery store or a restaurant, or anything else, and expect to be successful. It takes some understanding of the business.

I believe the average life of a restaurant, I am told, is two weeks.

Mr. Vaughn: Is that right?

The Court: I think that the average person thinks that he can step in and throw on an apron, get a skillet out and cook something that the public will like. It only takes them about an average of two weeks to find out he is wrong. I was told that, whether it is true or not, that the average life is two weeks.

So the human equation has to enter into it. Go ahead. I interrupted you.

Mr. Vaughn: Not at all, your Honor. I invite your interruptions, because as you have indicated, I would like to know what is on your mind and hopefully be able to [fol. 2722] answer the questions that are on your mind.

Absent any question at the moment, I would like to turn to the question of the definite history of acquisitions, which the Government has talked so much about. They had a Dr. Mueller with the Federal Trade Commission, sitting back in Washington, sit down with a group of statistics and tell us how many mergers there had been here. He listed the mergers, the acquisitions by firms, such as Mayfair, Alpha Beta and Thriftimart, in the period 1949 to 1958. He neglected to state however—and the evidence now shows—that those three concerns sold more stores than they acquired in the same period of time. There was a net loss in number of stores for those concerns during that period of time.

Dr. Mueller also told us about the mergers that Fox, McDaniels and Yor-Way had accomplished.

Each of those firms in 1960 failed, and it is generally attributed to the fact that they expanded too rapidly with too little capital. They acquired too much, in other words, too quickly.

The Court: Those three were Fox, Yor-Way and what?

Mr. Vaughn: McDaniels.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: Each of those concerns went out of busi- [fol. 2723] ness. Most of their stores went to smaller concerns, independents. 18 of Fox's more than 40 stores were acquired by Food Fair, not by reason of any merger, really, it was by order of the United States District Court in a bankruptcy proceedings that Food Fair entered this market. That also, it seems to me, is significant, because each of those firms were in the top 20 in 1958, the year the Government continues to talk about. By 1960, however, by the end of 1960, or perhaps by the end of 1961, they were bankrupt, they were out of business. And that, almost necessarily, if you add together their percentages in 1958, means that after 1958 there was a decline in the share of the market of the top 20.

The Court: How many stores, right offhand, did Fox, McDaniels and Yor-Way represent, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: I can give you that information as of 1960, your Honor.

The Court: That's what I mean.

Mr. Vaughn: I have trouble reading my own exhibit. Just a minute. Fox had 39.

The Court: 39?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Vaughn: McDaniels had 17, and Yor-Way had 19. [fol. 2724] The Court: How many does that total? 78?

Mr. Knight: 73.

Mr. Alsup: I have got 75.

The Court: Give it to us again. Maybe I got the wrong figures as we went along. It was, first, 39——

Mr. Vaughn: 39 for Fox.

The Court: 19——

Mr. Alsup: 17 for McDaniels.

Mr. Vaughn: 17 for McDaniels, and 19 for Yor-Way.

The Court: That's where we made our mistake. That's 75 stores, is that right?

Mr. Knight: 75

The Court: We have no evidence as to the volume of business, do we, on those stores?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, we do.

The Court: I don't recollect it.

Mr. Vaughn: As of 1960 Fox had 4.2 per cent of total grocery store sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

The Court: Fox did have, that's right.

And the next one, 17 stores?

Mr. Vaughn: McDaniels had 1.1 per cent.

The Court: And the other one had 1.1, approximately? [fol. 2725] Mr. Vaughan: No. Yor-Way had .7 per cent. It was 19th in 1960.

The Court: May I see that exhibit for a moment? Is that our exhibit or your copy?

Mr. Vaughn: It is our copy.

Mr. Coyle: I think you have my copy of that exhibit some place.

The Court: Do I? You are right. Thank you. I thought I had given it back to the clerk.

Go ahead, counsel.

Just taking a quick look, as I remember, this exhibit sets out the sales in dollars, doesn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, it does, in thousands of dollars.

The Court: Well, thousands of dollars, yes.

Now, Von's at that time was $85 million in 1960, is that right, approximately?

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, this, I should add, for all of these concerned is projected on the basis of six months' figures, which is all we had available. This was collected in major part by the FBI.

The Court: Now, let's take the Fox Markets. How many at that time do we have? It shows 48 here, doesn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: Maybe I misspoke myself. Just a [fol. 2726] moment.

The Court: Am I looking at the wrong column?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes. I am sorry. I gave you the wrong information. I am sorry. Fox Markets does have 39 stores, but it only had 3.6 per cent of the market, it is the eighth one down on the list, and had sales in 1960 of $41,430,000.

The Court: In other words, what I was coming to, it had about half the volume of Von's, approximately——

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor, that's correct.

The Court: —with 48 stores, as contrasted with Von's of, what was it at that time?

Mr. Vaughn: After the merger it was 64——

The Court: No, I mean Von's before.

Mr. Vaughn: Before the merger they had 27, or 28, I beg your pardon.

The Court: 27 as against 48, and you have about—27 stores doing a little better than two times the volume of Fox Markets; right?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes.

Again, I misspoke myself. Those 1960 sales figures are only for the first six months, and not projected out for the year.

The Court: I don't see how that could possibly be. Do you mean all of them?

[fol. 2727] Mr. Vaughn: All in 1960, that's correct.

The Court: The 85 million of Von's, in other words, is only for the six months?

Mr. Vaughn: That's right. That is after the merger, that includes Shopping Bag's figures.

The Court: And the twenty million is for the six months, also—I mean the 41 million?

Mr. Vaughn: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: It still would be on a projected basis about a little over two times?

Mr. Vaughn: That's right.

The Court: The other one was, in addition to Fox—I want to look at McDaniels. McDaniels had nine stores, as I remember; is that right?

Mr. Vaughn: No. I think it had 17.

The Court: Let's look again. I think McDaniels had——

Mr. Vaughn: It is the sixth one from the bottom. That would be 17.

The Court: Yes. I have 16 here.

Mr. Vaughn: I don't know how that happened.

The Court: And I have the figure of 10 million 248—rather 12 million 357.

[fol. 2728] Mr. Vaughn: Are you sure you are not looking at the 1958 column for number of stores?

The Court: I am looking at—I think you are correct, counsel. I am looking at the '58 column of stores and the '60 sales volume. I am sorry.

Mr. Vaughn: That is not the clearest exhibit ever introduced in evidence.

The Court: It is a little difficult reading, but we will do the best we can.

17 stores and the figures is $12,357,000, is that correct?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So McDaniels was doing a little more than half—their volume is only 1/7th of Von's, is that right?

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, as of that time you have to consider the Von's-Shopping Bag merger had taken place, so you are really talking about 64 Von's-Shopping Bag stores, not the 28.

The Court: That's true, that is correct. You should divide that by almost a half, by 2?

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: So it would be about ¼?

Mr. Alsup: Yes. And they had roughly about ¼ the same number of stores, and did roughly about—— [fol. 2729] The Court: A fourth of the business in volume. Yet they went broke on it.

We have just looked at—was that McDaniels?

Mr. Vaughn: Yes. Yor-Way would be the next to last on the exhibit.

The Court: So they had 19 stores in 1960, and they did about $7 million. So their volume is only about 1/7th. And that would mean the volume per store would be about three hundred some-odd thousand a store, wouldn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: You are faster than I am. But that is only for half a year, however.

The Court: That's what I am talking about. If you carried it out it would be about six hundred thousand a store.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that's right, your Honor.

[fol. 2730] The Court: I see. There you had volume to a certain extent, and—there is no evidence why they went broke.

Mr. Vaughn: I think there is in the affidavit of Mr. Engleman.

The Court: I remember that. That was a little bit speculative, though, wasn't it?

Mr. Vaughn: He was pretty intimately involved with the Yor-Way stores. He was with the Credit Managers Association, which took over and managed those stores for the creditors. He is of the opinion, and he is a man that has been in this business——

The Court: He has had a lot of experience, that is true.

Mr. Vaughn: He was of the opinion that all of these chains had over-expanded on bad capital. And another factor, had chosen poor locations sometimes at exorbitantly high rents.

The Court: It is probably the over-expansion as much as anything. At least that was the indication.

Mr. Vaughn: I think so. If you wish me to, I can go on with this.

The Court: I don't think so. While I may not have exactly every factor in mind, I think the general trail of this evidence I am fairly familiar with.

Mr. Vaughn: Actually, I have been referring to and [fol. 2731] reading from our proposed finding No. 86. I really think in our proposed findings your Honor will find our version of this case.

The Court: I am just wondering whether this experiment has been tried—maybe this is a good case to try it out—I don't think it will shock the legal profession or the judges: I might just suggest, just thinking aloud now, that each side proceed to write an opinion for me. I don't mean by that that I am going to adopt the opinion. Then I will sit down with those two opinions—I will tell you what I have in mind. When you try to write something in the form of an opinion you sometimes find that your logic fails you.

Mr. Vaughn: That's right.

The Court: You can think something and think it ever so strongly, but when you try to put it in writing, it sometimes comes up short. I wonder what you gentlemen would think about the idea. I have put you to a lot of work in this case. I don't know whether you would be willing to undertake such a problem or not.

Mr. Vaughn: I don't think we would have any difficulty writing an opinion, the type I would suggest.

Mr. Alsup: Our opinion would follow right along with the findings of fact we have filed.

The Court: There is more than are in your findings. [fol. 2732] I have suggested more today.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, you have.

The Court: It would require footnotes or discussion. I am not going to insist that you do it, but I thought maybe this would be an opportunity to do an eloquent job on your position and might show me where the strength lies. I grant you findings are very helpful and these findings have been most helpful from both sides in reviewing this case, because from time to time I have gone back to them; that with the pretrial order.

I will tell you this: There is no substitute for a pretrial order, particularly in this type of case. It has been most helpful.

What do you think, Mr. Coyle? Does this sound ridiculous to you?

Mr. Coyle: I have always wanted to be a judge, your Honor——

The Court: I am not sure that your opinion will be adopted, nor am I sure that other counsel's will be. Maybe Mr. Knight will dissent with what you write.

Mr. Knight: I will concur.

The Court: Do you think it is asking too much?

Mr. Coyle: Anything that would help the court.

The Court: I can decide the case within a reason[fol. 2733] able time.

Mr. Alsup: We will be glad to do what your Honor wishes——

The Court: This is not asking you to write an opinion that I am going to publish, but it may well be—I had a law clerk recently write an opinion and he did a splendid job, except I wrote a completely opposite opinion when I wrote mine, and his opinion and mine were diametrically opposed. But his opinion was most helpful to me in guiding me to that conclusion.

Mr. Alsup: The only concern that I have in the matter, and I feel obligated to mention it, certainly this is not any fault of your Honor, it has been before three judges, we have written briefs, two or three briefs for each judge, and the cost and expense of litigation of this type is just terrible——

The Court: It is terrible. Probably I am asking you too much.

Mr. Alsup: We certainly will do anything if you think it will be helpful.

The Court: I am sure you wouldn't find it possible to do it in one evening.

Mr. Alsup: That's right.

Mr. Vaughn: Both Mr. Alsup and I have a habit of writing out in longhand. That takes a long time.

[fol. 2734] The Court: I will tell you. I have learned one thing. To cope with a machine, sometimes it is pretty difficult to learn to talk to a machine. Some people can do it, but I have found great difficulty in sitting down and thinking into a machine. I begin to wonder what the machine is going to say back to me.

Mr. Alsup: I have the same reaction, your Honor. I can't do it.

The Court: What is your idea, Mr. Coyle, about this?

Mr. Coyle: I am agreeable.

The Court: Do you have a lot of time on your hands?

Mr. Coyle: I don't have time on my hands, but I will find time.

Mr. Alsup: I am afraid it would take some time, your Honor. I am being harassed by the government on some problems for the Blue Chip Stamp Company, and I know Mr. Vaughn is. It is a question of how long your Honor would want to delay the decision.

The Court: I don't want to delay it too long. I think I will have to, frankly, go back—this is the trouble in a District Court. You cannot sit down and work continuously on a matter. If you could do that, I could probably have had this case out of the way. But each time I get about [fol. 2735] just on the findings one or two pages along, then I have to go to a trial, and the first thing you know I have a problem in that trial and I have to stop, and my law clerk and I have to research the problem and think it out. Then I go back to the case and start again and the first thing you know I have three problems on my hands.

Mr. Alsup: And you have the problem on the weekends, as was perfectly apparent yesterday, your Honor, with all of those matters.

The Court: It has been almost impossible to do any work on the week-ends because of the heavy motion calendars I have on Monday.

Mr. Alsup: You had any number of matters yesterday.

The Court: It just was a suggestion. I can see how it might be a heavy burden.

Of course, I don't want to put any burden on you gentlemen that I can assume myself.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor did plan to write an opinion in this matter?

The Court: I don't know whether I will or not. I noticed in one of the cases, I have forgotten whether it was one of the Supreme Court justices or the appellate court, where he said, seemingly, he was shocked because, "We note there is no opinion in the case."

[fol. 2736] Mr. Alsup: There was no opinion in the case decided by Judge Thurmond Clarke. It was all findings of fact and conclusions of law.

The Court: What case was that?

Mr. Vaughn: The Bliss & Laughlin case. There was no appeal by the government there. That was true, also, in the Ling-Temco case, decided in Texas. Strictly findings of fact and conclusions of law, and no opinion, and no appeal.

The Court: Well, the appeal doesn't bother me. The only thing is, if it is appealed, I would like to have it go up in such condition that it can be readily understood without too great an effort on the part of the higher court.

Mr. Alsup: So do we, your Honor.

The Court: It may be that I will not write an opinion. I don't know. I haven't made up my mind yet. There are a lot of matters that probably could be touched upon that you would not necessarily touch upon in findings.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: Comments of various kinds.

Mr. Alsup: And reference to other cases.

The Court: That's right.

Are you finished, counsel? I think the day is about finished.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, you know me, I could go [fol. 2737] on forever on this case that we have lived with for about four years; but unless your Honor has any specific question, I think that I am through.

The Court: There is one other question and I am finished. You may not have finished on what the competitive situation was after the merger.

Mr. Vaughn: The increase in competition?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Vaughn: It is very easy to list out a few things right off the bat, as I tried to do yesterday.

Discount houses. There is a completely new development. Milk depots is a new development. The sale of food and related products through other types of outlets, a relatively new development. All of these things increasing competition. The entry into this market of the third, fourth, and sixth largest concerns in the nation that weren't here in 1960. Then, and really the most important aspect of the increase in competition, is the plain everyday competition provided by other conventional grocery retailers in every area in this metropolitan area.

Your Honor, there isn't one single household in Los Angeles or Orange Counties that does not have available to it many grocery stores, and I mean "many" seriously. This isn't just a generality. Four or more, every single household, and these people are competing every day for the [fol. 2738] patronage of that housewife.

Another indication, I think, of the competition here, and this may provide you, your Honor, with something to look at, which would indicate our position here, and which would give your Honor some insight into the increasing competition. From Food Mart News, dated March 6, 1964, there is an article wherein Mr. Joseph Goldberg, one of our witnesses, has a lot to say about competition in his particular area, which adds up to what is already in his affidavit and more or less brings up to date a lot of his remarks, and if your Honor would like to look at this——

The Court: No, I don't want to look at it, but give the substance of it. I can't treat it as evidence. I will treat it as nothing more than argument. I certainly am not going to be influenced in the decision of the case by it. If you want to summarize it for me, you can do it.

Mr. Vaughn: This is the man in Whittier who has a small or smaller store than any of his immediately surrounding competition. There is a Safeway a hundred yards away, and a Food Giant a hundred yards away. There are three supermarkets beating at each other on one corner in Whittier. Mr. Goldberg is an independent. He operates the King Cole store. It used to be a chain and Mr. Goldberg used to be an executive in that chain. It disbanded and he operates that store as an independent. He is able to out-compete his [fol. 2739] chain rivals 100 yards away. He has increased the sales of that store from slightly over $2,000,000 to almost $3,000,000.

The Court: I believe a good part of that is in his affidavit.

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

The Court: Did he testify or was it an affidavit?

Mr. Vaughn: It was an affidavit, your Honor.

The Court: That's what I thought.

Mr. Vaughn: He is of the opinion, as he stated in his affidavit there, that the independent can succeed. And he says in this article, your Honor:

"'Sound hard,' after describing his operation? 'You bet' he grinned. 'That's why there are fewer independents today. But those that are in the field are making money. And, after all, they deserve it, they are working harder for it."

The Court: In other words, what you are saying is, as I understand it, that the evidence indicates to you that this merger has not brought about the probability of a substantial lessening of competition?

Mr. Vaughn: No question about it.

The Court: The area is still open, competitive persons being competitive opening up and succeeding?

Mr. Vaughn: Absolutely. I don't believe there is any question about it.

[fol. 2740] The Court: Don't you have to concede if we apply the test that is contended for by counsel for the government——

Mr. Vaughn: That we have to apply that test?

The Court: No. Don't you concede if that test is applied, that your merger would be contrary to Section 7?

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I believe that these two concerns are, quote, substantial factors in a, quote, substantial and significant economic market.

If that's all you have to prove to show a violation of Section——

The Court: No. He goes a step further. He says—you remember, you made the argument about the Federal Trade Commission case, and he then goes one step further and says if his test is correct——

Mr. Vaughn: This business about increasing competition——

The Court: I will read it to you right now. He adds onto that now: "A merger of this magnitude"—I think you have to concede this is a merger of some magnitude in the market—"which has a definite history of prior mergers"—which there have been prior mergers——

Mr. Vaughn: There have been prior mergers, but as I tried to indicate to your Honor, none of them has been significant. I can trace through every one of those mergers and show your Honor how they can be offset by consider-[fol. 2741] ations which Dr. Mueller back in Washington didn't take into consideration.

The Court: This is the point, though, that I am making: He doesn't say what kind of mergers. He says a "history of prior mergers."

Mr. Vaughn: There have been some prior mergers.

The Court: ". . . and increasing concentration . . ."

Mr. Vaughn: I deny it. I don't believe there has been increasing concentration. I will tell you why. Back in 1948 Safeway and Ralphs had 21.4 per cent of this market by themselves. There wasn't another concern, not one other concern that had as many as 30 stores, or as much as 3 per cent of the market. They were all small, local concerns who had begun locally with one store and were commencing to grow. Now in the next decade Safeway and Ralphs, despite the fact that they operated successfully in this area, and certainly Ralphs has been one of the most successful concerns that has ever operated grocery stores in this area, and despite the fact that they increased their dollar sales very significantly, their share of the market declined by 50 per cent down to less than 14—about 14 per cent, approximately 14 per cent.

Now, it seems to me in a concentrated industry, if the word means anything, that the market leaders don't get [fol. 2742] knocked around by small concerns that grow; the market leaders are able, at least, to maintain their position and increase it. But these smaller concerns, the Von's, the Market Baskets, the Thriftimarts, came into prominence in this decade, until in 1952, take half-way through the decade——

The Court: Let me interrupt. What does he mean by "increasing concentration"? Does he mean that the 10 markets have a larger volume of business, or does he mean that more stores are concentrated?

Mr. Vaughn: I think that what Mr. Coyle means by that, he slips on a record I have heard many times, and that is that the top 20 chains had a greater share of the market in 1958 than they had in 1948. And the top 20 chains did—which top 20 is the real $64 question. The top 40 in 1948 weren't the same as the top 20 in 1958.

The Court: Were there really 20 top chains in 1948?

Mr. Vaughn: I think you had to get down to pretty slim pickings.

The Court: That's the question I am asking. In 1948, talking about chains, I notice—these are the 20 we are talking about?

Mr. Vaughn: These are the 20 that were in existence in 1960, that's right.

The Court: I am talking about on the left side of the [fol. 2743] sheet here, 1948.

Mr. Vaughn: The only concerns listed here are the top 20 in 1960. We did not endeavor to set forth the top 20 in 1948, because that's different.

The Court: What I'm trying to find out is what does the record show? Were there 20 top chains in 1948?

Mr. Vaughn: I don't think there is any question, if you adopt Mr. Coyle's definition of a chain.

The Court: I understand, but I am asking that question for you, what is your contention?

Mr. Vaughn: Our contention is that there were 20 concerns operating two or more stores, if that's a chain, more than 20 in 1948, yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now answer this question, please, if you can: How many of those 20 operated five or less stores? That may be sort of an unfair question at this time on account of it requires the memory of——

Mr. Vaughn: It not only requires memory, it asks for information which I, frankly, do not have.

The Court: What figures can you take—5, 4, 6, 3, or whatever it is, and tell me what percentage, approximately, would fall—how many of those chains are four stores or less?

Mr. Vaughn: According to my best information, I think this is probably the best I can do for your Honor, the [fol. 2744] only chains that I am aware of in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1948, who had 10 or more stores, were Safeway, Von's, Shopping Bag, Ralphs, Market Basket, Alpha Beta, Mayfair, McDaniels, and A. & P.

The Court: Did Alpha Beta have more than 10 in 1948?

Mr. Vaughn: It did. It had 18.

The Court: These figures on this Exhibit AN that are listed over on the left side of the page under 1948, they don't contain all of the 20 that you consider the top in 1948, do they?

Mr. Vaughn: Would you just hold up AN so I can see it?

(Court indicating.)

Mr. Vaughn: That is AM, not AN.

The Court: These are apparently fastened together. It is AM, then. The thing that would save me a lot of extra work in going back to determine is what were the so-called 20 chains, by name, in 1948.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, I don't know that we can give you that information. Some of the statistics as to market share in 1948 were derived from the Bureau of Census, which will not reveal the names of the chains in the top 20. They will give you the percentage share of the market in the top 20, but they won't give you the names of the chains.

[fol. 2745] The Court: To me it is important to know—I guess it can't be known—what is the chain and what kind of chain it is.

Mr. Vaughn: I agree with your Honor, and I wish I could provide you with the information. But the FBI went out at the behest of the government and checked a lot of information and simply was unable to come up with some of the information that would fill in these blanks.

I can tell you this, that in 1960, of the chains that were in the top 20 then——

The Court: Well, that I know, counsel. I am pretty sure about that.

Mr. Vaughn: (Continuing): Eight of them, all but 12, were not in existence, or at least did not have anything of the market in 1948.

The Court: I am familiar with that.

Well, the one thing that is missing, so far as my coming to grips with some of the things in this case, is: What was that change that took place in there? And I don't have it in the case.

Mr. Vaughn: I think you do have it in the case, your Honor. In 1952—or 1948, this area was characterized by two large chains, a group of small chains, and a lot of independent stores. In the succeeding years those two large chains have experienced a decrease in market share, [fol. 2746] they have lost business. Why? The smaller chains of the late 1940's, in addition to which there were independents operating then, and concerns that weren't even thought of in 1948, have come along and despite the predominant position of Safeway and Ralphs have acquired a larger and larger share of the grocery business. This has resulted, the growth of these small concerns into medium-sized concerns, has really resulted in the sort of growth in the market share of the top 20 which the government is talking about. This does not indicate to me an increasing concentration of power. It really shows that the market leaders aren't able to hold onto their advantage. And when you get big enough, the small aggressive merchant who has a few stores, and his eye on a few others, can get those stores, acquire more business, and take a more predominant position in the industry.

The Court: Has Ralphs lost in its total sales since 1948? They have gone up, haven't they?

Mr. Vaughn: They have increased their total sales, and so have Safeway, but their share of the market has declined.

The Court: That is what I was coming to. You say their share of the market has in fact declined?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct.

The Court: Whereas the share of the market of the so-called independents or smaller chains of 10 stores or [fol. 2747] less have increased?

Mr. Vaughn: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: Do you dispute that, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: The market share of the other chains have increased. Some of them with over 10 stores, their market share has increased, too.

The Court: I understand that.

Mr. Coyle: I understand that Safeway's Market share has decreased between 1948 and 1958. And I am not sure that Ralphs market share has decreased. Not very much. Their market share has remained about constant.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. Coyle: The market share of everyone else has increased, every other one of the top chains.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Coyle: It is only Safeway that has really gone down.

Mr. Vaughn: My point is, your Honor, that you would expect in an economy where there is concentration, if that word means anything—I guess it is a bad word in this case—if it means economic dominance, which I suppose the government says it means—if you found that, you would not find small concerns growing and taking an increasing market share. It just would not be possible. Within any practical and meaningful contention, concentration has de[fol. 2748] creased, not increased, in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

The Court: I wonder if maybe in your argument it wouldn't be a better word to use to say it spread?

Mr. Vaughn: I think that's right. And it is spreading even today.

The Court: "Increasing," "decreasing" is one thing, but I think "spreading" is something else.

Mr. Vaughn: I think that's right.

I don't think "concentration" has any place in this case. It is an essentially meaningless phrase when applied to this case.

The Court: The problem is inherent in the case, but whether there is concentration in the sense that is intended is another matter.

Do you think you have had your say, counsel?

Mr. Vaughn: I think I have. I ought to ask Mr. Alsup if he has anything to add.

Mr. Alsup: No, your Honor. Yesterday morning I heard you remark to the young lady who was here being sentenced that she should choose her associates well, and I think we have done that, I am pleased with Mr. Vaughn.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, I would like to make two points.

The Court: All right. Come forward and let's do it. I don't think you can complain you haven't been heard [fol. 2749] in this case.

Mr. Coyle: No, that's true.

The Court: But whether you have been understood is another matter.

Mr. Coyle: In setting forth the basis of our case on pages 11 and 12, line 28 through line 7 on page 12, I just want to point out the language is: "A merger of this magnitude, occurring in this market, * * * I think the word "this" should be underlined.

The Court: Don't you remember, I did?

Mr. Coyle: We didn't take a per se approach. We take the approach described by the Supreme Court in Brown Shoe. That is why we have been talking about this market business. That's the first point I want to make.

The second point I would like to make is that this spreading of concentration, as the court put it, in the period——

The Court: I am not calling it that. I just merely——

Mr. Coyle: I will call it that. The spreading of concentration only spread down to the top 8. When you got down to the top 8, the top 8 increased their total market share in the period between 1948 and 1958. So the other 7 members of the top 8 made up for the losses that Safeway had, so it is not as if it were spreading to the top 20. [fol. 2750] If I have made my point.

The Court: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Coyle: The third point I would like to make is that these various chains that have gone out of business or have financial difficulties, like Fox, Yor-Way and McDaniels, didn't sell all of their stores to independents. Many of their stores went to other members of the top 20.

The Court: There is no doubt about that. The record so shows.

Mr. Coyle: And the Fox Markets also were held intact to some extent and are now operated by Food Fair.

The Court: Didn't Fox go through receivership?

Mr. Vaughn: 18 of a total of more than 40.

Mr. Alsup: I think Food Giant took over 9 of the McDaniels Stores out of bankruptcy, and I gather there are hearings going on now, Food Giant would like to get rid of them.

Mr. Coyle: It is not as if they went out of the top 20.

Finally, I would like to say that this footnote 38 of Brown Shoe does mention an FTC opinion, and counsel has referred to a particular footnote in the FTC opinion as interpreting the opinion of the Supreme Court. I think that's going far afield to interpret the Supreme Court by a footnote in the FTC opinion.

[fol. 2751] The Court: It may shed light on what the court is trying to say.

Mr. Coyle: I feel the language is clear on that page, and the footnote itself. And that is the footnote we have been relying upon, your Honor.

The Court: You must concede in the sentence that cites footnote 38, the court makes a full statement—let me find it here. Without reading the whole thing again, the court, beginning at the top of the page, goes on to say: "... whether the consolidation was to take place in an industry that was fragmented rather than concentrated ..."

We will go on. Then it goes on to say: ". . . had experienced easy access to markets by suppliers and easy access to suppliers by buyers or had witnesses foreclosure of business, that had witnessed the ready entry of new competition or the erection of barriers to prospective entrants, all were aspects, varying in importance with the merger under consideration, which would properly be taken into account."

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, your Honor.

The Court: So the footnote is merely in support of that statement.

Mr. Coyle: That's correct, and I am referring to the FTC case cited in the footnote, which counsel seemed to be citing.

The Court: I think you must concede, counsel, in making [fol. 2752] a decision I have to anticipate, or try to, the probable future. Is that right?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct. There is no question but what this is controlling. This language on page 322 is very important, and we feel this is the thing we have been meaning all this time. When we use the expression "occurring" in this market," we intend to take into consideration whether the industry was fragmented, rather than concentrated, or whether there has been a trend towards merger, and whether there were more firms in the industry coming in than going out, or whether there were more going out than coming in. That is what "easy access" means.

The Court: Let me ask you one other question. This may be a sort of almost a trick question: Would you say that the relevant area that we are considering is more fragmented or concentrated?

Mr. Coyle: I would say that it was fragmented, it is still fragmented, but there is a trend toward domination, which means a trend away from fragmentation. That is what "increase in concentration" means.

The Court: In other words, your position—it goes back to what you said a while ago, fragmentation is departing and concentration is increasing?

Mr. Coyle: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: For that reason you think that the [fol. 2753] Act applies?

Mr. Coyle: That is part of the market structure analysis, and that's why we are not making a per se approach. That's what we mean on page 12 when we say ". . . occurring in this market, which has a definite history of prior mergers and increasing concentration."

The Court: All right, gentlemen.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE DEFENDANTS

Mr. Alsup: May I make one remark. It will be short.

The Court: If it is a lawyer's remark, no; if it is a short remark, yes.

Mr. Alsup: It will be a short one.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Alsup: This amuses me somewhat. The government's theory is if a merger occurs in a fragmented industry, then you have to find it unlawful; and if it occurs in a concentrated industry, then obviously it is unlawful. Philadelphia Bank. And it really gets back to what Justice Cardozo used to criticize, the so-called tyranny of labels. Because they have to win, under their theory, under either set of facts. If it is fragmented, certainly they win; if it is concentrated, obviously they win. And obviously that is not what the courts have said.

The Court: "Obviously" of course is a label, too, isn't it, counsel?

[fol. 2754] Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I quite agree with you in one respect, that we have arrived at an age of labels in everything, in business, in society, in everything we do, labels. And I remember trying many cases, particularly in accounting, and I always enjoyed it, because mathematics and accounting have no resemblance to each other whatsoever; one is a series of labeling, which is accounting, and the other is mathematics, which is an exact science. I don't mean to mislead you that I have any knowledge of the two subjects, but I learned that much anyway.

Mr. Vaughn: Your Honor, would you like to have our volume of the Federal Trade Commission Decisions?

The Court: I think it is in the law library, counsel.

Mr. Vaughn: Fine.

The Court: Anything further, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, except to thank your Honor for your patience.

The Court: I have deliberately sort of gigged—I don't like to use that expression—both of you, to try to bring forth your thinking to help me in the process of determining this case. It may seem simple to you, gentlemen, on each side, but I sit in a position which supposedly is a little more objective, and I will tell you that the case has been of con- [fol. 2755] siderable more difficulty to me, and it has cost me a lot of time and a lot of worry, but I shall hope to have your decision within some reasonable foreseeable future.

The case will now stand re-submitted, and I am hoping within the next couple of months that I can give you an answer. Whether I will do it by opinion of findings—if I do it only by findings, I will probably want you to appear at a hearing to settle the findings. I will first go over them and may then call you to try to settle the findings. I have found that that is probably in the long run the simplest way to do it, do it right in court and settle the findings, as they used to do in the old days. So the case will stand submitted and I thank you for your arguments and the presentation.

Mr. Alsup: Thank you, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: Thank you.

[fols. 2756-2758] IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Honorable CHARLES J. CARR, Judge Presiding

No. 336-60 CC Civil

[fol. 2759] COLLOQUY BETWEEN COURT AND COUNSEL

(Other court matters.)

The Clerk: Item 11 on the calendar, Case No. 336-60 CC Civil, United States of America vs. Von's Grocery Company, for hearing on findings.

Mr. Alsup: Ready, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: Ready for the government, your Honor.

The Court: Well I am not ready. I didn't find until Friday afternoon at 5:00 o'clock I had a heavy calendar this morning so I haven't had a chance to read them. I don't know what happened.

The Clerk: That was Thursday, your Honor.

The Court: Thursday, but I was in trial on Friday.

Mr. Alsup: They got mislaid, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: It was a clerical mistake. Our calendar clerk, your Honor, took them up to serve them in the Antitrust Division. And Mr. Knight was away and Mr. Disney took the original and the court's copy through error and sent them to Mr. Coyle. And our calendar clerk brought back these other copies. It was a clerical error on our part, as Mr. Knight will concur.

We apologize to the court for the error.

[fol. 2760] The Court: Can you be here at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I don't know why you want to make a record in this case—is that what you want to do?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I don't have to do that.

Mr. Coyle: That is up to your Honor, of course.

The Court: What is it?

Mr. Coyle: That is up to your Honor, of course.

The Court: I don't know why you cite the El Paso case, I don't know what bearing it has in this case. I am sure you disagree with my judgment in the case.

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what your Honor is going to do yet.

The Court: Well I can tell you one thing, I am going to stick to my judgment.

Mr. Coyle: I would presume that, your Honor.

The Court: Well, I will have to read them, I guess. Maybe I won't have any further hearings on the matter, I will just sit down and take a pen or pencil and go over the findings. The record will show I have already been over one complete set, spent hours and hours of effort on them. I am wondering if this case will ever terminate. [fol. 2761] What do you gentlemen wish? How long are you going to be here, Mr. Coyle?

Mr. Coyle: I will be here as long as your Honor wants me to be.

The Court: Well, I don't want you to have to come back at taxpayers' expense. You know, I am a taxpayer, too.

Mr. Coyle: So am I, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: Judge Yankwich indicated, your Honor, in this case in the 5 Federal Rules Decisions that it was his practice to make full and comprehensive findings, since the Ninth Circuit had directed, but he would just go through and scratch out things——

The Court: That is what I usually do, but I usually have to stop and rewrite pages.

Mr. Alsup: Well, I thought if your Honor scratched, so chose to do, our office could retype them on the basis of the scratchings out.

The Court: I wonder if you could be here—what do we have, Mr. Clerk?

The Clerk: We have one sentence at 2:00 o'clock.

The Court: Yes. I hate to be in such a hurry. I don't think I can really read these between now and 3:00 o'clock.

How about tomorrow morning, gentlemen, how are you fixed tomorrow morning?

[fol. 2762] Mr. Alsup: That is fine, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Continue the matter until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock. We have nothing set, do we?

The Clerk: No.

Mr. Coyle: If your Honor please, last Friday defendants served an additional paper on us. I don't know whether your Honor is going to read it or not, that certainly wasn't called for by the schedule. Maybe we would want to reply to that paper. I just got it this morning when I got in town.

The Court: I am sure it is nothing but a reply to your statement, I glanced at it.

Mr. Coyle: Well, we are objecting to defense counsel making the findings, your Honor——

The Court: Counsel, I want to tell you this here and now, no lawyer makes the findings in this court. I make my own findings. If you are trying to jockey me into a position—if you are trying to take the position that they took in the El Paso case, it doesn't happen to fit me.

I have already been over these findings at great length, and that is the reason for this further proceeding. And that is it. I requested defense counsel to prepare specific findings. I just don't adopt any lawyers' ideas in findings.

[fol. 2763] Mr. Alsup: That is perfectly apparent, your Honor. That is why we prepared the memorandum in opposition to——

The Court: You must be looking for error, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I am here under procedure, that is all, provided for the Federal Rules.

The Court: This procedure has been in vogue in the federal courts since the beginning of time.

Mr. Coyle: It has been criticized by most courts of appeal and the Supreme Court.

The Court: Let them continue to do it, let them continue. I imagine Judge Skelly writes the most of them. He must have gone up now to the Circuit Court. So maybe he will enjoy these criticisms. They don't impress me at all, not at all.

We will set this matter for 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning. At that time we will proceed to try to arrive at a settlement of findings. If I am not to have the assistance of counsel in the preparation of findings—any lawyer, any judge who says that is erroneous just hasn't practiced law. He just doesn't know what he is doing.

10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Other court matters.)

[fol. 2764] Los Angeles, California, Tuesday, December 8, 1964, 10:00 A.M.

The Clerk: Case No. 336-60-CC Civil, United States of America vs. Von's Grocery Company, for settlement of findings.

The Court: Trying cases is one problem, but hours and hours with findings with you gentlemen is another problem, a bigger problem. And most of the higher judges who have never been around trial courts apparently don't comprehend what they are talking about when they recommend that judges draw their own findings. They don't realize, those who have never been in lower courts, that we have hours and hours and hours of work to do, paper work, and then trying cases day in and day out with all of the new law that is coming in, it is impossible, just impossible. I suppose those judges who are anxious to get promoted will go along with that idea, with such statements, but to me it is ridiculous, utterly ridiculous, the time I have spent on these findings.

Now, I am about to dispose of them without further ado. I have written an Opinion in the case on which I spent hours and hours and hours. This case has probably taken up all told several hundred hours of my time when I am trying cases on a calendar last year of over 250 cases. So what the upper courts may say in criticism of the lower [fol. 2765] courts doesn't concern me in the slightest, not in the slightest.

Now let's proceed.

I have read over the lengthy objections of the government. Now, Mr. Coyle, what is your main objection, other than what you have stated already, to the findings at this time?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think we have stated our objections in writing. There is no main objection. We object to many of these findings.

The Court: I don't seem to find the basis of the proposition that the evidence is not in the record to support the findings.

Mr. Coyle: To some of the findings we do——

The Court: All right, let's seriatim go down the list, take the original—maybe you had better take a copy of the findings and conform it, conform the corrections as we go along. And then I will have counsel who are to prepare this —I am going to finish with this matter, I am not going to carry it on the rest of my mortal career in this world.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, would it be of any help to furnish you with a copy of the original findings, the changes which we—— [fol. 2766] The Court: I think I remember—the record should show that we spent at least an hour or so in chambers after I had gone over the original findings. And at that time I pointed out to counsel the various findings that I thought ought to be revised. I see that many of those have been eliminated.

Mr. Alsup: Every one your Honor objected to was eliminated or changed according to your Honor's suggestions.

The Court: When you get into the semantics or the economics of the Antitrust Division, it is almost like a patent case. Every statement you are dealing with semantics.

All right, let's start with the very first——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, there is one question that is puzzling me now. We are here pursuant to a letter from Mr. Figg which says that the date of hearing on the objections of plaintiff to defendants' proposed findings was changed from November 23rd to December 7th, and providing that the defendants are allowed to and including November 24, 1964, to lodge and serve a revised set of findings and conclusions and the plaintiff is allowed to and including December 3, 1964, to file objections to the proposed findings and conclusions as revised.

Now, I am unable to reconcile this letter with the [fol. 2767] approach suggested by defense counsel in the latest paper filed on plaintiff, as to why we are here.

The Court: You are here to settle findings. This has been in vogue, in practice in federal courts since before you were born, counsel. I have been doing it myself, either as a lawyer or as a judge for 40 years, and the rules have never changed. And no judge is going to sit down and make a meticulous study or recommendations, except when he writes an opinion, to get up findings which can be done by counsel and save the court's time.

Mr. Coyle: It is our understanding that the findings we are talking about today are the work product of defense counsel. They are not the product of any conference or any hearing that the government——

The Court: That is an incorrect statement, erroneous, completely incorrect. It is part of the work product of my conference with counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I was not present, I was not notified in time to be there. There was a conference without a reporter in chambers between defense counsel and some representative of the Los Angeles office——

The Court: What are you trying to do, counsel——

Mr. Coyle: I am trying——

The Court: Recommend a dehors in chambers or something?

[fol. 2768] Mr. Coyle: No, I am just trying to find out where we stand.

The Court: You are here for one purpose, you are here for one purpose and that is the settlement of findings, settlement of findings.

Now let's come to grips with that problem and no more argument.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: Come to grips with the problem. I have said enough.

Argument Re Findings

Mr. Coyle: All right. Let's look at the findings——

The Court: We are going down seriatim, seriatim down the findings.

All right. Paragraph 1.

Mr. Coyle: Paragraph 1, our excerpt from the pretrial conference order which refers to this portion of the pretrial conference order, and I believe that the pretrial conference order paragraph should have been substituted for paragraphs 1 and 2. We submit——

The Court: Well, I am going to leave it as it is. If it is true that Von's operated 28 grocery stores—if I remember the record, the record shows that Von's is a Delaware corporation.

Mr. Coyle: It doesn't state that Von's is a publicly owned [fol. 2769] corporation, which the pretrial conference order so states.

The Court: All right. Third, what is your objection to paragraph 3?

Mr. Coyle: It is very complex, very garbled, it is almost impossible to——

The Court: Is it incorrect factually in any place?

Mr. Coyle: Only that it is not explicit.

The Court: All right. No. 4.

Mr. Coyle: No. 4. Yes, No. 4—I don't know what No. 4 means. I think it is incorrect factually, but

> "For the most part, Von's Stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

That is meaningless, a meaningless statement.

The Court: It isn't to me. It is exactly what the evidence shows.

Mr. Coyle: What are the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan——

The Court: All right. No. 5.

Mr. Coyle: This is part of the same series they revised and distorted. The pretrial conference order——

The Court: This court is not obligated to incorporate verbatim the pretrial conference order.

[fol. 2770] Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, there is no point in entering into these orders if——

The Court: I don't care to hear any argument on that point. What is wrong factually with 5? Is there any incorrect fact set forth in 5?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor, but it is not good——

The Court: All right. No. 6.

Mr. Coyle: It is part of the same scheme.

The Court: Is there anything incorrect in the statement:

> "As of March 25, 1960, Shopping Bag Food Stores was a California corporation operating 36 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, and two grocery stores in San Bernardino County, California."

Mr. Coyle: That is not our objection to 6. Our objection to 6 is that it is cumulative with certain findings that counsel have drawn up and that the court apparently is going to adopt mechanically here——

The Court: Counsel, I don't appreciate your characterization. If I were you, I would desist. The word "mechanical" doesn't apply to this judge and I don't appreciate those statements. I advise you not to use them any more. I have spent hours and hours going over these findings, working on these proposed findings here. There is nothing [fol. 2771] mechanical about it. These findings are the result of conferences with me and instructions as to proposed findings.

All right, proposed finding No. 7, what is your objection to No. 7?

Mr. Coyle: We have the same objection to 7 as we have to 6, your Honor.

The Court: Any factual misstatement there, anything that isn't true?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know.

The Court: All right. No. 8.

Mr. Coyle: The same objection as to 7 and 6.

The Court: Is there no evidence in the record to support that statement?

Mr. Coyle: There may be some testimony by one of the officials. I am not even certain of this. It certainly has no relevancy to the case.

The Court: No. 9.

Mr. Coyle: It is the same garbled argumentative type of finding.

The Court: No. 10.

Mr. Coyle: No. 10 is like No. 4. And I would like to discuss No. 4 and No. 10 together.

4 sets forth:

"For the most part, Von's Stores were located in the [fol. 2772] southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

10 says:

"For the most part, Shopping Bag Stores were located in the northern and eastern portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

If I understand these two findings, your Honor, you could revise the names of the firms to say the same thing, when you talk about the northern and eastern portions, you are talking about three-quarters of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

The Court: As I remember the evidence, one ran toward the south and one ran toward the north, and if the Shopping Bag——

Mr. Coyle: I think south.

The Court: And the other was more or less in the opposite direction.

Mr. Coyle: That isn't what these findings say.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: 4 and 10 just don't make sense, your Honor.

The Court: You can argue that to the Supreme Court. No. 11—you can try to convince the Supreme Court of that, it is all right with me. I haven't the slightest concern after this case leaves my hands.

[fol. 2773] Mr. Coyle, Your Honor, do you want to make a more specific finding than 4?

The Court: I am not about to.

No. 11.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: I have played games with your Antitrust Department about all I am going to. I am going to play no more games in this court, counsel.

Now No. 11.

Mr. Coyle: No. 11 is just not complete enough. We have objected previously to No. 11——

The Court: Anything factually incorrect?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: No. 12.

Mr. Coyle: No. 12 is factually incorrect for several reasons.

One. it attributes the reason for the merger to Von's, not Shopping Bag. They are two corporations. Now Mr. Von der Ahe——

The Court: I distinctly remember evidence in the record to the effect that Mr. Hayden was concerned about the lack of executive material developing in the company, he was concerned about the volume of business increasing but profits going down.

Mr. Coyle: That might be true, that might be true, Mr. [fol. 2774] Hayden——

The Court: Do you disagree with that?

Mr. Coyle: ——might be the reason Von's and Shopping Bag found it desirable.

The Court: I don't see it.

Mr. Coyle: You see, for many reasons on line 4——

The Court: Maybe we are looking at a different thing. It says:

> "12. Von's and Shopping Bag found it desirable to merge for many reasons——"

Mr. Coyle: That's right, and I say the word "reasons"——

The Court: That doesn't mean that they had the same reasons. One had certain reasons and the other had difference reasons, a different set of reasons.

Mr. Coyle: We are talking about a corporation. Corporations don't have reasons——

The Court: They are operated by an executive board of directors.

Mr. Coyle: They operate through a shareholders' board. These aren't reasons advanced by the shareholders in the SEC prospectus——

The Court: All right, take up 13.

Mr. Coyle: Does your Honor——

[fol. 2775] The Court: No, I am not going to listen to that kind of argument about reasons of a corporation—I am not going to waste time when I have as much to do as I have to do, I am not going to sit here and listen to that kind of argument.

If you want to advance some argument that has something to it, but to tell me a corporation can't have a reason, it sounds ridiculous to me.

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor. Let's look at Proposed Finding 7—no, Proposed Finding 12(a), commencing at line 7.

> "The operations of the two chains complemented each other with little overlap in the geographical areas each served."

The pretrial conference order says in paragraph 20 that the large trade area in which the defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. That is the trade area they operated in. That is what the pretrial conference order says——

The Court: All right. I will pass on to something else. If you have got some real problems where the facts are not supported here, I want to see them.

Mr. Coyle: This isn't supported in our——

The Court: Anything else on 12?

[fol. 2776] Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: Might as well get it on the way to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Coyle: 12(b) says:

> "Prior to the merger, W. I. Hayden was almost solely responsible for all of Shopping Bag's business affairs * * *"

This was a publicly held corporation with a board of directors. Maybe Mr. Hayden was on the board of directors, but I am sure Mr. W. I. Hayden was solely responsible for the operation of Shopping Bag——

The Court: I can tell you one thing, counsel, there is usually one man on the board that practically runs the show. If you don't have that experienced man—I have consulted with many corporations, there is usually one man that does the work.

Mr. Coyle: He is not——

The Court: I think we are playing with semantics. I will just take the word—strike out the word "solely" and put in——

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, may I suggest striking out "almost solely" and put "primarily"——

Mr. Coyle: That is the same thing.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. Where it reads where the court ordered dissolution of the merger of the three companies and [fol. 2777] entered a decree that the president of the three companies could not thereafter serve following 1960 because he was the primarily responsible person for running the three corporations, and they felt that this executive could no longer work for the company, it was found to be a violation of the antitrust laws.

The Court: I suggest, counsel, somebody go to a bank and try to borrow $5,000,000 and see if you get it. It won't be some stockholder. If it were, the company would probably be broke in six months.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure that is not one of the main troubles, your Honor——

The Court: All right. I will label "Prior to the merger, W. I. Hayden——"

Mr. Coyle: He was president of the company, your Honor.

The Court: We have got presidents of companies, counsel, that don't know what is going on, they couldn't read a profit and loss statement—I served as president of a corporation once. I directed it only to do a client a favor, because I was a lawyer, but I expected the corporation to be run by other men, other officers. All I did was sign checks and collect my own salary and enjoy a vacation each year. You have to be realistic in these things.

I am going to say "was the most actively responsible [fol. 2778] person——" Rather, I will put it "officer and stockholder carrying on the affairs of Shopping Bag's business."

Have you got it?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. What is next, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: All right, even this line 15:

> "By 1959 it was apparent that Shopping Bag's earnings and profits were declining——"

The Court: That is as obvious, it is right in the record as clear as crystal.

Mr. Coyle: "Shopping Bag's earnings and profits were declining even though its sales were increasing."

Their earnings and profit were declining for one year or for a number of years, one straight year, or two years? I don't think that is the court's conclusion that they were declining. They could have declined for two years and gone up the next year.

The Court: All right. I am going to make that finding. Is there anything further in 12?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, paragraph (c):

> "After more than 30 years in the grocery business Mr. Hayden wanted to become less active, but he was concerned about what would happen to the Shopping [fol. 2779] Bag——"

That is not Shopping Bag. That may be Mr. Hayden——

The Court: It doesn't say it is Shopping Bag, it just says in plain English here that he was concerned about what would happen if he got out of the business. That is what it says.

Mr. Coyle: Referring back to subparagraph 12:

"Von's and Shopping Bag found it desirable to merge for many reasons——"

The Court: Counsel, the Supreme Court can take the Opinion I wrote—it seems to me to be clear enough, it may not be a great document but it is clear enough for the Supreme Court to at least anticipate what I was doing.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I think the Opinion was clear. But I don't see any relevancy in that finding.

The Court: Well, the rules require findings, although they do permit the court to indicate that the Opinion may stand in place of the findings. But there are many facts that probably should go in the findings that I didn't include necessarily in my Opinion. In writing an Opinion you don't cover quite so wide a scope as you do in findings.

Now this may sound strange to lawyers or judges who have never spent any time in trial courts, I don't know—and I am not particularly concerned, frankly. I have come [fol. 2780] to the point where I think the more experience you have the greater detriment it is in the world. And to serve on this bench, if you are a really experienced lawyer, you have got problems.

All right, what is the next?

Mr. Coyle: This is paragraph (e), subparagraph (e) of paragraph 12.

"Prior to the merger, the Von der Ahe family owned 80 per cent of Von's stock and the Hayden family held 60 per cent of Shopping Bag's stock."

Again this is the Von der Ahe family's reasons and the Haydens' reasons. It is not the reason for the merger.

The Court: Well, it says so, it says just as a fact, that is what it is. Now you go on and it says——

Mr. Coyle: That's right.

The Court: "It was recognized that the death of any member of either family who held a large number of these shares might create estate tax problems——"

No question about that, no question about the matter, it would. You can't die in peace any more.

Mr. Coyle: This is not a business reason for buying Shopping Bag.

The Court: What is it?

Mr. Coyle: This is not a business reason for buying Shopping Bag, this was Von der Ahe's reason and Hayden's [fol. 2781] reason.

The Court: That is true, that's right. And that is what it says.

Mr. Coyle: Except that it all relates back to paragraph 12 which purports to list the reasons of Shopping Bag and Von's——

The Court: Counsel, if that is what is bothering you, we will just take care of that in one brush of the pen, we will take care of that.

All right. We will just put on line 3, paragraph 12:

"Many of the factors——"

Well, I think we will just rewrite 12 entirely, that is the first part of 12, those three lines:

"Many of the factors which affected the officers and directors in consummating the merger were:——"

Anything wrong with that?

Mr. Coyle: It is not relevant, but there is nothing wrong with it factually.

The Court: The only thing apparently that is relevant is that—I really don't know what is relevant in this case. There are a lot of peculiar economic factors—probably if you put a student of economics on the stand, or on the bench, who had never had any experience, you would get [fol. 2782] one reaction; if you put a practical man with some experience on the bench you would get another reaction. All I can do is use the little I have learned in the last 36, 38 years and hope it will be right.

So we will change it and make it:

"Many of the factors which affected the officers and directors in consummating the merger of the two corporations were:"——

You know, I always remember a famous statement made by a great boxer and fighter, and I think I have tried to follow it. That is, "Don't fight over something just to be fighting, and don't fight until you get in the ring, you might get knocked out." That is what I feel like this amounts to, you are fighting over things that are not really of any consequence.

All right, what is next?

Mr. Coyle: Let's go to No. 13. No. 13, it says:

"Shopping Bag had expanded rapidly through internal growth. However, it suffered from a shortage of qualified executive personnel"——

The Court: Well, that has been testified to.

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag was expanding, it was opening stores all over the area, it was a profitable corporation. I don't think that was sustained——

[fol. 2783] The Court: I remember a company back in 1929 that lost a million dollars a day when it was expanding, and went broke.

Mr. Coyle: Shopping Bag wasn't losing money, it was making money.

The Court: Well, the evidence showed that—I distinctly remember the evidence was to the effect—and it wasn't refuted—one of the problems they were having was they were trying to expand, were expanding, and they were not developing the executive personnel to take care of the business.

Mr. Coyle: But they were not suffering from it, Judge, they were expanding, they were making money.

The Court: I don't think there is a company in America today that isn't suffering from a shortage of qualified executive personnel.

Mr. Coyle: Perhaps they didn't——

The Court: All right, I am going to leave it, that is the evidence as far as I am concerned, and it is right in the record.

Mr. Coyle: Then it says:

"Moreover its earnings and profits had steadily declined——"

Those years from 1957 were their highest sales.

The Court: I will hear from other counsel on that steadily [folio 2784] declining.

Mr. Alsup: Perhaps your Honor——

The Court: Is that correct, is that correct, steadily declining?

Mr. Alsup: They declined in the years 1958, 1959, following a good year in 1957, your Honor.

The Court: Yes, but what happened, this merger took place in——

Mr. Alsup: March of 1960.

Mr. Coyle: 1959 was a good year, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, the beginning of the decline, shown on page 6 of the findings, shows that in that same period Von's profit and net had gone up——

Mr. Coyle: Definitely——

Mr. Alsup:—during the same period of time that Shopping Bag's was declining.

The Court: That is true, Von's was far more efficiently operated from the evidence than was Shopping Bag.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I would say also your Honor refer to the profit figures on page 6.

The Court: I am just going to start with:

"Moreover its earnings from——"

What was that date, that year?

Mr. Alsup: 1957.

The Court: "—1957 had declined despite a steady increase [fol. 2785] in total sales."

I think that is now correct.

Mr. Coyle: You might also note that 1959 was a strike year, your Honor.

The Court: Was a what?

Mr. Alsup: It is reflected in Von's——

Mr. Coyle: That would reduce——

The Court: Look at Von's in a strike year, what happened then?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think we have to face the fact that Von's was an unusually profitable corporation. I am sure that these percentages of net income, net profit to total sales, compare favorably, would compare favorably with Safeway. If I remember, your Honor, Safeway's profits are about 1 per cent of total sales.

The Court: Well, I am going to leave it that way, I am going to leave it.

Mr. Coyle: To get it clear, your Honor:

"Moreover, its earnings and profits——" what year did you say?

The Court: From 1957.

Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: "Its earnings and profits from 1957 had steadily declined despite a steady increase in total sales." [fol. 2786] Mr. Alsup: Yes.

The Court: These findings, as I view them, are nothing more than to bring to the fore—to save the court, the entire court, if you go on, hours of digging through this record.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, if they had not been prepared by defense counsel, I would say that is so.

The Court: Do you think I am going to stop and prepare findings? Well, I will just tell you I will never do it.

Mr. Coyle: I think your Honor has prepared findings and these are not——

The Court: I am in complete total disagreement with Judge Skelly's fantastic concept that judges should always prepare findings, and I am not about to do it. And no busy trial judge—such as we have in this District—is going to do it. I suppose in patent cases the trial judge ought to sit down and spend hours and hours and hours on findings.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor is referring to line 26 on page 7——

The Court: One thing you have convinced me, hereafter, as I have done heretofore, I will go over findings and I will amend and strike out——

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, that is fine, but these find- [fol. 2787] ings were filed in July of 1963 and the court didn't do that——

The Court: You know, I may terminate this any moment.

Mr. Coyle: That is your prerogative, your Honor, of course.

The Court: You have come in, since you have left this case, with the attitude that you are going to do everything in your power to aggravate the court, and you are going to succeed if you keep on. This has been your attitude——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, this isn't the first time I have been here——

The Court: You have been around, counsel—all right, proceed.

[fol. 2788] Mr. Coyle: That is in paragraph 13——

The Court: I hope you will read this part to the court when you read the other part, about your antagonizing the court. Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. Line 26 on page——

The Court: I hope you will read one other thing, while I am thinking about it, and that is that you tried to revive an issue which you clearly waived, then you tried to revive it at the last minute after the case was disposed of?

You remember the issue, don't you?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor.

The Court: Of the wholesale situation, you don't remember that?

Mr. Coyle: I think I know what you are referring to. I certainly didn't waive any issue at any time and then try to revive it.

The Court: I found that you did.

Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: Let's go to line 26 on page 7. "declined despite a steady increase in total sales."

That's not true. There was a decrease in total sales in 1959 as reflected on page 6.

Mr. Alsup: On the relative basis there was an increase, because that was the year we had the strike.

Mr. Coyle: There was a decrease. It is just not correct [fol. 2789] to state there was a steady increase.

The Court: I think I will just strike out all of the line—starting, "Moreover," until the end, strike it out. All right. 14?

Mr. Vaughn: To the end of the finding, or the end of the sentence?

The Court: I see no reason to put the other in. I am sure many did.

The thing we can't seem to separate, we can't separate the experienced merchandiser from the man who jumped in at the last minute with no experience.

It is now considered that anyone who has money can buy in and operate any kind of business, whether it is an automobile, airplane, or cotton gin. Those factors, of course, do not come into play in the great economics of these things, because they are not considered. But a company is no better than its management. If you talk to any experienced banker who starts to make a loan, the first thing he wants to know is about the management. That's the first thing he wants to know. And if they have poor management, you are not apt to get a loan.

Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Down to 14, I think, your Honor. It starts out: "The parties have agreed and the court [fol. 2790] finds," and then it doesn't state what we agreed to.

We think what we agreed to we state correctly in proposed paragraphs 14 and 15, which we have submitted with our objections.

The Court: What is wrong with 14?

". . . finds that the relevant line of commerce in this case is groceries and related products taken as a whole."

That is almost verbatim what the pretrial conference order says, itsn't it?

Mr. Coyle: It doesn't say these products have peculiar characteristics and uses in the operation of r tail grocery stores which make them distinguishable fr.m all other products.

The Court: There is no issue in the case about the relevant—counsel, what do you accomplish by this? There is no issue on the relevant line of commerce here at all. There is only one issue, really, in this case. That is whether or not there is a probability that the competition will be substantially lessened.

Mr. Coyle: That's why we object to findings which only half state——

The Court: All right. Take up 15. I won't bother with it.

Mr. Coyle: We have the same objection to 15. We agreed [fol. 2791] to more than this. We agreed that this is the area of effective competition. They leave that out. We agreed that this is the relevant section of the country for determining the effect of this merger. All that is left out. I don't know why they left it out. They wrote 40 pages and they couldn't put precisely what we agreed to on the line of commerce and the section of the country.

The Court: Counsel, when you go to the higher court, do you have any problem other than one problem, and that is whether or not this merger will probably substantially lessen competition? Is there any other problem in the case?

Mr. Coyle: Or tend to create a monopoly. I think——

The Court: I can't believe that you are going to get up before the Supreme Court and argue this creates a monopoly. If you do, I will be astounded, I really would.

Mr. Coyle: I view it as you do, I view that as a basic issue, but I think these proposed findings are injecting all these little subsidiary issues as to whether this is the area of effective competition, which we have already disposed of in the Memorandum Opinion and in the pretrial stipulation. But these people won't put it in the findings.

The Court: Where is this inconsistent—let's take the pretrial order just so we can waste some more time.

Mr. Coyle: Look at paragraph—it starts at paragraph [fol. 2792] 20, I guess.

The Court: What page of the pretrial conference order?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. At least in the copy I have. It is paragraph 20.

The Court: Well, there is more said about it than that.

Mr. Coyle: I say starting there. That's correct, starting there. That first sentence they leave out. "The relevant trade area in which the defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties."

The Court: Isn't that what they say here?

Mr. Coyle: I don't see them saying that.

The Court: Well, counsel for the other side, will you point it out to me? Maybe I don't understand what he is talking about.

Mr. Alsup: I don't understand, either.

We have agreed what the relevant section of the country is.

The Court: He said:

> "The parties have agreed and the court finds that the relevant section of the country in this case is the [fol. 2793] Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, which is defined as Los Angeles and Orange Counties."

Mr. Coyle: In which the defendants operated. Where these chains operated.

Mr. Vaughn: Where is that in the pretrial order?

Mr. Coyle: In paragraph 20. It is also in the memorandum opinion.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, we have pointed out in earlier findings that the 28 Von's stores were located in Los Angeles and Orange County, and 36 of the 38 Shopping Bag stores were located in Los Angeles and Orange County.

Mr. Coyle: Why beat around the bush?

The Court: Let him finish, will you please?

Mr. Alsup: I think counsel is nitpicking. We have got everything here that he wants out of the pretrial order.

The Court: All right. Pass on to something else.

Mr. Coyle: No. 16, it is not a finding, in the first place, and it is not true, either.

The Court: Well, I am going to leave it in.

Mr. Alsup: It is directly from the opinion, and the opinion is directly from the evidence.

The Court: In other words, my opinion—I can't pick out a finding from that and use it, is that right?

[fol. 2794] I am going to.

Mr. Coyle: This is a statement of what somebody says we have done. Which we don't agree we have done.

The Court: Well, that's my finding. And I don't know how you can come into court at this late date and contend otherwise. All you have to do is read your pretrial conference order.

Mr. Coyle: If they had stuck with the pretrial conference order, that would be one thing. But they are interpreting or amending it.

The Court: How do you interpret this, on page 12, lines 3, 4?——

> "The government assumes no burden of proof as to the relevant section of the country at the wholesale level since it intends to base its case on the probable effects of the merger in the relevant section of the country for grocery retailers, which is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

Mr. Coyle: There is only one way to interpret it. It means what it says. It means we didn't try to prove what the relevant section of the country was for grocery wholesaling. We have one section for wholesaling of meat, another section for wholesaling of dry groceries, and this would be an endless job.

[fol. 2795] The Court: All right. Take up the next one. I am going to approve that.

Mr. Coyle: This is very speculative, No. 17; it has these words "small," "usually," "typical," the word "if" in line 6. It is just a vague, argumentative finding, speculative——

The Court: There is nothing speculative about it. It is just about what I said in my opinion.

This used to be a city of, on the whole, small corner groceries. That is what it was. These stores, usually one man or one woman could operate them. Usually that was the case. They did have Safeway here, which the findings say in other places.

Mr. Coyle: What do you say when you say "usually one man or one company"?

The Court: I am satisfied with it, so I guess it will have to stand.

Maybe you can find a couple of good straw men in here somewhere and you can work on them when you get to the higher court.

Mr. Coyle: I am not looking for straw men.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: Well, we have the same objection to 18—19. It says: ". . . Safeway was by far the most prominent factor"—— [fol. 2796] The Court: I agree with you in one thing, the word "prominent" should come out.

Where do you see the word "prominent"?

Mr. Coyle: Line 25.

The Court: I will strike the word "prominent." Wait a minute. Let's put it, "During the 1930's Safeway"—I suppose you could say it was the leading chain, on the evidence, couldn't you?

Mr. Coyle: I suppose you could say that.

The Court: All right. It is said, ". . . the leading chain in the retail grocery business . . ."

All right. Proceed.

Mr. Coyle: Let's go down to 22.

The Court: 22?

Mr. Coyle: Finding 22. Page 10, line 18.

The Court: Yes?

Mr. Coyle: This statement "keeping pace with the population explosion"——

The Court: I don't find where you are talking about. On page 10?

Mr. Coyle: Page 10, line 20, your Honor.

The Court: ". . . keeping pace with the population explosion which this area was experiencing."

Mr. Coyle: Yes, that "keeping pace," I don't believe there was any evidence that the building of stores was [fol. 2797] keeping pace, was exceeding it, or not keeping pace.

There were a lot of supermarkets opened, and there was a lot of population explosion, but I don't think they were ever related.

The Court: I think from the evidence and from anyone who would just open his eyes you probably will find we have not only been keeping pace but going ahead.

Mr. Coyle: Then it is not keeping pace; it is exceeding the population.

The Court: Well, I am not going to change it.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Down to 23, over to page 11, lines 1 and 2.

The Court: Line 23?

Mr. Coyle: No. Lines 1 and 2 on page 11. Finding 23. "While the foregoing figures are not necessarily completely accurate, they appear to be the most reliable which could be obtained."

The Court: What is wrong with it?

Mr. Coyle: Well, ". . . are not necessarily completely accurate, they appear to be the most reliable which could be obtained"—I don't know that you can say that. I think it is an improper statement.

The Court: We will cut out "not necessarily completely accurate," and just say, "The figures appear to be the [fol. 2798] most reliable which could be obtained."

I don't know that that changes it, but I will strike it out. "The foregoing figures appear to be the most reliable which could be obtained."

That's the way it stands.

I don't know what that does or what mountain that takes down, but we will leave it that way.

You know, the thing that concerned me all my living career, I have been concerned with practical problems and getting things done. I think we are just picking away—there is an old famous saying—at carroway seeds.

We have got the roll in our hands and we are picking at carroway seeds.

Mr. Coyle: I couldn't agree more. I don't think these findings are necessary, and that's why——

The Court: Counsel, I am sorry to have to disagree with you, but I find it necessary.

What is next?

Mr. Coyle: No. 24. "The following are some of the reasons for the decline in the number of stores . . ."

The Court: Well, I have read them very carefully and if they are not in keeping with the record, then——

Mr. Coyle: There are a lot of other reasons, too.

[fol. 2799] The Court: What other reasons do you want to put in there? You are entitled to that, if you have some reasons that you want to add. What are they?

Mr. Coyle: Well, one reason would be because of the inability of small chains and independents to compete.

Another reason would be because of the shortage of acceptable sites in shopping centers for small firms and individuals.

Another reason would be the lack of financial reserves in small firms and independents.

The Court: I think we have covered that——

Mr. Coyle: I don't think——

The Court: —elsewhere.

It has been so obvious. It has been said that the larger concerns are usually favored because of their better standing and credit. I don't think there is any question but what these findings cover that.

Mr. Coyle: What I am objecting to is stating some of the reasons in this paragraph and not stating all of them. I don't see any reason in stating some of the reasons.

The Court: I don't think it is illegal, counsel, so I am going to leave it.

Mr. Coyle: It is not going to be too helpful, I don't think.

The Court: You mean to you it is not going to be too [fol. 2800] helpful.

Mr. Coyle: To anybody else.

The Court: I thought findings were supposed to be what the court predicated its decisions on. Most of these things, as I find them, are the things that I took into consideration in deciding this case. And on the whole they have followed the outline, pretty much, of my Opinion, I think. They have filled in some details that I didn't feel I should put in the Opinion.

And I notice the Supreme Court in one case was rather critical that the material had not been sifted before it got to that court. Of course the sifting job is a big one. So I was trying in my Opinion to do that job of sifting.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. And I have no quarrel with your Opinion; it is just coming here 90 days later to make some findings.

The Court: Be it 90 or 380, we are doing it, counsel, and we are going to continue.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

Going to Finding No. 25——

The Court: Unless you want me to open a night court. Perhaps that could be done. But I won't be here to serve it.

What is next?

[fol. 2801] Mr. Coyle: Finding 25.

"In 1948, Safeway operated a large number of stores . . ."

The Court: Well, I think they had, what was it, a thousand stores?

Mr. Coyle: Not in 1948. This is 1948. I think maybe they had a hundred and fifty or sixty stores, may one hundred eighty——

The Court: Isn't that a large number of stores?

Mr. Coyle: Not compared to the thousand they had back in the 1920's.

The Court: What is your contention as to why the thousand stores went out of business?

Mr. Coyle: Because they were small. Safeway was closing its small stores——

The Court: Your whole case here has been predicated on the theory that the number of stores started out with so many, population increased so much, and there are fewer stores today. The trouble with that syllogism is it starts out with a false premise, a false major premise and a false minor premise.

Of course you can draw any conclusion in the world on false premises.

Mr. Coyle: I am not here to re-argue the case, but—— [fol. 2802] The Court: I am sure you would if I would allow it.

Mr. Coyle: No. I am sure I wouldn't, your Honor.

The Court: I am sure you would be glad to.

All right. I will leave that stand.

What is next?

Mr. Alsup: On page 12, line 27, there is a typographical error. It says "three to ten." Your Opinion said "two to ten," and I didn't catch that.

The Court: What are the facts. I thought it was two to ten.

Mr. Alsup: I think the facts from Dr. Jensen's testimony and from others was three to ten, but your Opinion said two to ten, and that is perfectly acceptable to me.

The Court: I think I will just leave the "three" in.

The court might as well find a couple of errors in the Opinion. That would be healthy. If it were perfect, I wouldn't be satisfied. So we will leave it.

What else, counsel?

I know one thing. In working on this Opinion I had to do it between trials day in and day out, and it is quite a job to sit there with all the volume of exhibits and records [fol. 2803] and try to work on the case, with the interruptions, lawyers all day long, orders to sign, memoranda coming from every department of the government, cases to be tried day in and day out, motions all day on Monday. It is not very easy, believe me. I am not allowed to retire to the great sancrosanct chambers where quiet reigns at all times and I may have a dozen or so law clerks pile up the information for me. I have to do it all myself.

All of this has been done by me, counsel, not by any law clerk. No clerk has touched this case at all. So it hasn't been mechanical.

Take up the next item.

Mr. Coyle: All right. We are up to page 13, line 2.

"The market leaders, Safeway and Ralphs, were not able to maintain their pre-existing share of the total grocery store sales in the face of this increased competition."

The Court: I agree with that absolutely. The evidence proved that to me.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Safeway's market share declined. Ralphs, in the period 1948 to 1958, went from 6.9

per cent to 6.5 per cent. I don't believe that is much of a decline——

The Court: Counsel, you must take into consideration that the Ralphs Stores were being closed and new stores [fol. 2804] opened——

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: —and the volume of business——

Mr. Coyle: It is not true to say they weren't able to retain their pre-existing shares.

The Court: I will leave it stand.

Mr. Alsup: The specific facts are on line 14.

The Court: I will leave it stand.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Down to page 14. Paragraph 28, subparagraph (a), line 11. The word "opened"; I think that was acquired. They acquired that store. It was a pre-existing store.

The Court: I don't remember that. You will have to tell me, someone.

Mr. Alsup: The affidavit of Mr. Hughes, your Honor, stated that he was employed by Thriftimart, he had built this store and leased it to Thriftimart, when he left Thriftimart in 1952, I believe it was, he took over the lease on this store which he had owned which had theretofore been leased to Thriftimart.

Mr. Coyle: It was a store he had acquired from Thriftimart.

Mr. Alsup: And began doing business in the first Hughes Market.

The Court: I am not going to worry about it.

[fol. 2805] Take up the next matter.

Mr. Coyle: I think that same objection runs through a number of these findings, that they say "opened" when they mean "acquired," your Honor. I think there is a difference between opening a new store and acquiring an existing store.

The Court: Well——

Mr. Coyle: When you talk about opening, you are talking——

The Court: The opening or acquiring doesn't affect the over-all picture insofar as lessening competition, does it?

Mr. Coyle: I think that it does relate to this issue of ease of entry. Change of ownerships doesn't demonstrate anything as to ease of entry. It demonstrates somebody sold out.

The Court: It demonstrated one thing to me. One of the clearest threads that ran through this case was that the people who left the chains and went out and opened one store, and from there built up a substantial business, in this great area that you claim there was a monopoly, yet these men of experience could step out into the area, leave the companies and open a business and prosper.

Mr. Coyle: I think the evidence shows they acquired stores. They didn't open a business; they acquired some- [fol. 2806] body else's business. Some people were selling out and some people were buying stores, but I think the evidence——

The Court: Would you say they acquired the first Hughes Market, for example?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: It wasn't a Hughes Market.

Mr. Coyle: They acquired it from Thriftimart.

The Court: I will leave it stand.

I don't think the semantics are worth belaboring.

Mr. Coyle: Let's go down to No. 29, page 16. Line 11. "In 1922, fifteen of the smaller grocery retailers concluded that they could not effectively compete against some of the chains then doing business . . ." I don't think there was any evidence to this purport.

The Court: As a matter of fact, I shouldn't think the defendant would want that finding. I have a question mark on that finding, myself.

Well, they were competing effectively, so why am I going to make a finding that they couldn't?

Mr. Alsup: I think the affidavit of Mrs. Charles Von der Ahe and the affidavit of Campbell Stewart of Certified Grocers, your Honor, indicated that these smaller grocers in 1922, before there was a co-op like Certified, had to pay [fol. 2807] the wholesalers as much for their groceries as the chains were able to sell them at. And they had difficulty competing if they were close to one of these larger chains that could buy directly. That is what led to the organization of Certified.

I am really not concerned about whether or not it is in or not. I just thought it was part of the over-all history which the Supreme Court has indicated is desirable in some of these cases.

The Court: The Spartan Grocery Company—of course, I happened to be living in the community when these things——

Mr. Coyle: This is 1922.

The Court: —developed.

I hadn't finished my sentence.

(Continuing) —when they developed and flowered. When the Great Depression of 1929 began, the two organizations, I guess, the Spartan and the Certified, had become grown, as far as I remember, and were doing a substantial business in this area.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. We have figures here, your Honor——

The Court: Grocerys were available to anybody at every street corner and were piled up and for sale, and a lot of them couldn't be bought.

[fol. 2808] Mr. Alsup: Part of that history is reflected in the affidavit of Charles Von der Ahe. A number of these smaller grocers who could not buy directly at that time and could not get their groceries in quantity from Certified, if you will recall——

The Court: I am going to change this and put it in more adept language, in State Department language, and put it: "In 1922, fifteen of the smaller grocery retailers concluded that they could more effectively compete . . ."

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, my objection is that I don't think that anybody knows why these 15 smaller retailers did that. This is back in 1922.

The Court: That's my conclusion from the testimony in the case, the evidence.

". . . more effectively compete against some of the chains . . ."

What is your next?

Counsel, I believe the word is "Pyrrhic"—the victory you won there.

Mr. Coyle: I am not looking for a victory; I am trying to help in drafting these findings. I don't think these are good findings, but I don't think we are improving them very much. I am not seeking a victory here.

Your Honor, go down on page 17 to Finding 32, line 23. It says, "its members"—that is Certified's members—[fol. 2809] can buy these products through Certified as cheaply as the larger chains can purchase them directly."

I don't think the evidence sustains that. There is no evidence as to what the larger chains paid for their groceries.

The Court: Well, I thought there was some evidence in the case—I think, as I remember it, one of the owners, maybe it was Mr. Von der Ahe, I don't know which one, testified that—not only there, but in some of the affidavits—maybe defense counsel can refresh my recollection as to what I am thinking about.

Mr. Alsup: Yes. Your Honor, it is in the affidavit of Joseph Hughes who is president of Certified and runs Hughes Markets; it is in the affidavit of Campbell Stewart; it is in the affidavit of Ted Von der Ahe; and it is in the affidavit of Albert Goldstein who, as you know, left Food Giant to go into business as a single store operator.

Mr. Coyle: I think this is what the court said in its Memorandum Opinion and the most the record sustains: That the government had not demonstrated that chains can buy on better terms than independents.

But this goes one step beyond and says that independents can buy as cheaply as the larger chains.

We don't know what A. & P. is paying for groceries or what Safeway is paying.

[fol. 2810] The Court: Well, you may be correct about that. I think I will change that.

"... its members can buy these products through Certified on a competitive basis with the larger chains."

Does that make sense, or doesn't it?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor. It is, in effect, what you said on the bottom of page 13 of your Opinion.

The Court: Does that suit you, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I think it is better than it was.

The Court: Well, we can't get it quite up to what you want, so we will leave it there.

Mr. Coyle: All right.

Let's go to 34, if your Honor please, Finding 34 on page 18——

The Court: Of course we strike out the rest of that. "can purchase them directly." That is stricken out.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right. What is next?

Mr. Coyle: Paragraph 34 on page 18, line 10.

"The volume of Certified's purchases exceeds by a large measure the volume of purchases of any chain which does business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, with the exception of large national chains such as A. & P., Safeway, and Acme Stores."

[fol. 2811] That results because all the large chains, I think the record shows, purchased from Certified.

The Court: All the large chains purchased from Certified?

Mr. Coyle: Except for A. & P., Safeway, and Acme Stores. I think the record shows that.

The Court: The implication you are giving me is they purchased most of their things from them; and I don't know that to be the fact.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think they purchased the most.

The Court: I think the record indicated to me they purchased some items from there, but I don't know how substantial they were in dollars and cents.

Mr. Coyle: I don't, either. But I don't think this finding has any meaning unless it reflects that.

The Court: I think from all the evidence in the case that it seems to me to lead me to that inference, that they certainly run far ahead of—all you have to do is take the volume of business of either one of these chains and compare it to what Certified does, and there you draw your conclusion.

Mr. Coyle: But these chains purchased from Certified. The whole is always greater than the parts.

The Court: I understand what you are talking about, but most of these chains—by "chains," of course, there again [fol. 2812] we are using a term that you can't define. You claim a chain is from two to three stores.

Mr. Coyle: I am not making any claim. I am just talking about this sentence here which says, "The volume of Certified's purchases exceeds by a large measure the volume of purchases"——

The Court: It is still a true statement. I think I will leave it. It is a true statement even though it may include, as you say, part of the whole.

All right. Next?

Mr. Coyle: Okay. Down to paragraph 36. Page 18, line 25. "The membership of Certified"——

The Court: Page what?

Mr. Coyle: Page 18. I am sorry. Line 25.

The Court: Isn't that a correct statement?

Mr. Coyle: "The membership of Certified is made up of mainly small grocery retailers which are the primary source of Certified's business."

I don't think the record sustains that. Certified has large chains and has small chains, and there was no evidence as to who constitutes the major part of Certified.

The Court: I don't agree with you, counsel.

Take up something else.

[fol. 2813] I am sure the Supreme Court can check the record and go through this with meticulous care and find out if all this voluminous evidence supports that conclusion. I welcome them the opportunity.

Mr. Coyle: All right. No. 37 on page 19, line 6.

"Many of this area's leading chains commenced business here with one store . . ."

Some of them did and some of them commenced with two, some of them commenced by acquisition.

The Court: It says "Many"; what is meant by the word "Many"?

Mr. Coyle: I think Food Giant—somewhere else in these findings the statement is that Food Giant started with two stores. I don't think this finding adds anything.

The Court: I think the finding could stand, perhaps, some dressing. I think we can eliminate the problem by striking out those names, can't we?

What is the advantage of those names?

Mr. Alsup: I think the last sentence could very well be eliminated, your Honor.

The Court: All right, it is eliminated.

Any time I find agreement in one of these cases I am so startled that I want to get it down quickly.

All right. Next, Mr. Coyle?

[fol. 2814] I think we could save a lot of time if we just turned all the business in the country over to the Antitrust Department, and they could operate these companies, and they would be broke in a year and we wouldn't have any problems. We could all work together in one great Socialistic impulse.

Mr. Coyle: Is your Honor through?

Line 15 on page 19:

"The evidence fails to support the plaintiff's claim that the large chains have a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies or dairy items."

The Court: Well, does the evidence bring me to that conclusion?

Mr. Coyle: I don't know what "a substantial advantage" means. They either have an advantage or they don't.

The Court: If they had an advantage in the purchase of one brand, for example we will say Jones Sausage, would you say that that would change the picture?

Mr. Coyle: It would be an advantage. And these advantages might accumulate.

The Court: Or Yuban Coffee. Let's say they could get—I am not saying that is a meat. I really do know the difference. But let's just say—let's not take a coffee; let's take T-bone steaks, which apparently are going out of style in most places, Safeway still sells them and sells a lot of [fol. 2815] them—if Safeway had an advantage on T-bone steaks because of a specialty, would you say it would make that inacceptable?

Mr. Coyle: I think the word "substantial"—that might be a substantial advantage, I don't know.

The Court: Counsel, that is the only way I know how to word it, and that was the conclusion I came to from the evidence in the case. I am unable to split these things up into the lowest denominators.

When you get into this, it is not mathematics, you know; it is mostly semantics.

I am going to leave that as it is.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Down to 39——

The Court: Paragraph 39?

Mr. Coyle: Paragraph 39, line 19 on page 19:

"The merger with Shopping Bag did not give Von's any competitive advantage in the purchase of groceries and related products, including fresh meats, produce, and dairy products."

It did give them the advantage of getting the Shopping Bag warehouse and getting the Shopping Bag——

The Court: I had a question mark on the word "any." The word "any" or "every" always disturbs me. I suppose the word "substantial" could be substituted there.

Mr. Coyle: I think it did give them a substantial [fol. 2816] competitive advantage.

The Court: You may think that.

Mr. Coyle: I think the record shows that.

The Court: That is your opinion; not mine.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor is going to substitute "a substantial" for "any"?

The Court: What did I say in my Opinion, counsel, do you remember?

Mr. Alsup: You didn't——

The Court: I didn't put it that way.

Mr. Alsup: On page 14, line 4, of your Opinion, your Honor, you stated——

Mr. Alsup: Page 14, line 4.

The Court: Let's see.

"The government appeared to contend that the large chains had a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies. However, the evidence failed to support this claim."

You see, I put it in a style that you can't cut through.

Mr. Alsup: Then earlier, your Honor, on page 13, line 29, you referred to products carried by the cooperatives, and you state: ". . . there can be little doubt that the single (store) operator or small grocer can compete effec- [fol. 2817] tively with the large chains or anyone else in purchasing such groceries."

The Court: Yes, that's right.

Well, I think that ought to be changed. I think Mr. Coyle is correct. The word "any" is too all-inclusive. So I think —I still prefer what is in my opinion. I think I will just put——

Mr. Alsup: Actually, your Honor, 39 is really covered by 38, it seems to me.

The Court: Well, then, why repeat it?

Mr. Alsup: That just occurred to me, your Honor.

The Court: Out it goes.

Mr. Coyle: If we eliminated all the repetitive findings here, we would eliminate about half of them.

The Court: I think you are right in one respect, they are prolix, and I am sorry that they are, but here they are so let's deal with them.

Mr. Coyle: Is 39 eliminated?

The Court: It is eliminated. It is out.

I am sure that an IBM machine couldn't do this.

Go ahead.

Mr. Coyle: Finding 40, your Honor, is inconsistent with the court's Memorandum Opinion, and I think it is also very loosely written and ambiguous and prolix in general findings and should be eliminated.

[fol. 2818] The Court: Well, I think most of it is in accordance with the evidence.

The thing that bothers me is that first sentence.

Mr. Coyle: The first two sentences, I think.

The Court: Well, it is a contest, all right, for the patronage of customers and this is one of the most competitive fields in all the world right here in Los Angeles in the grocery business.

Mr. Coyle: If I could call your Honor's attention to the language we propose as a substitute for paragraph 40. We propose putting it this way——

The Court: I have read that over, counsel. The one that is in your proposal?

Mr. Coyle: Yes.

The Court: I read that over. I prefer to leave it as it is with just, probably—I am concerned not so much about the first sentence, but the second sentence: "Competition exists between any two stores only to the extent that they vie for the patronage of the same customers . . ."

I think that may be a little contradictory, because we can't say just where the fine line of competition is. I think generally it is true——

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, excuse me. We have this chain competition, also, which extends to the acquisition of new locations and the competition to build up an image, that [fol. 2819] the evidence dealt with, an image that will enable them to go into new areas and draw customers and have a well-known trade name, and all these other things, reputation for good service.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, we have got the network of competition in that same sentence.

The Court: That may take care of it.

Mr. Alsup: Your Opinion points out, your Honor, on page 16, that only a few of those of Von's and Shopping Bag's were in direct competition, since generally they were in different localities.

Perhaps if we put the word "direct" before "competition," it would conform to your Honor's opinion.

Mr. Coyle: We have this general competition——

The Court: Let me find out where he proposes to put the word "direct."

Mr. Alsup: Before the word "competition" on line 26, page 19.

The Court: I think that does do it, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: Direct competition exists between two stores in other fashions than this competition for the identical customers. Competition to buy better, competition to distribute better, competition to build up an image.

Mr. Alsup: Mr. Coyle is talking about grocery concerns, instead of retail grocery stores.

[fol. 2820] Mr. Coyle: That is the problem, we have these two types of competition, and this finding speaks as if there is only one.

The Court: It will be revised to read as follows:

"Direct competition usually exists between any two stores only to the extent," et cetera.

Mr. Coyle: Competition between firms and chains is not confined——

The Court: I am talking about competition between stores; not as between firms. The findings very clearly set out there is an over-all competitive situation in the whole area between all the firms.

Mr. Coyle: But, your Honor, the first sentence in this proposed finding 40 says, competition in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles area.

That's not talking about store competition; that is talking about over-all competition.

The Court: I am going to leave it as is, counsel. Take up your next matter.

I think the rule of law used to be, and still is, that if the evidence in the case supports the judgment of the court, the findings can be completely disregarded. So if the evidence in the case supports the court's decision here, it wouldn't make any difference, really, if I did make a few minor errors, or even some major errors, in the find[fol. 2821] ings.

Mr. Coyle: But the findings wouldn't be helpful to the Supreme Court, then.

The Court: All I can do is the best I can. What little erudition I may have, I am using it.

With my limited means we shall proceed.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, referring back to this 39, again, I think that the court found, and the evidence was clear, that the average customer in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is willing—I mean Finding 40—is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about four miles, to shop. I think that should be in these findings in those words.

The Court: It is in here.

Mr. Coyle: No, it is not. It says, "In other areas the average customer . . ."

I think you should strike that "In other areas," and say, "The average customer . . ."

The Court: I think that's correct.

Why in other areas?

Mr. Alsup: May I suggest, your Honor, that our own exhibit, which was Exhibit AV, the evidence of the store managers is that the draw area may vary from a fourth of a mile up to two blocks, up to 10 miles in some areas.

The Court: That's right.

[fol. 2822] Mr. Alsup: What Mr. Coyle hopes to do by the reference to the evidence given by Dr. Jensen, and which your Honor felt was impeached during the trial, is to impeach your ultimate finding that very few Shopping Bag Stores competed with very few Von's Stores, and he is trying to take this 10-minute driving four-mile area to indicate 16 Von's Stores competed with 21 Shopping Bag Stores.

The Court: He can argue that if he wants to. If anybody wants to accept that, there is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. Alsup: I just didn't want the reference to the evidence to impeach the ultimate finding that actually few were in competition.

The Court: I think it is—isn't it rather clear from my opinion?

Mr. Coyle: He is talking about a witness who is impeached. This is a witness you relied on in your Memorandum Opinion.

Mr. Alsup: You said his chart was impeached.

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. Your Honor, I think this man is putting words in your mouth. You admitted in evidence that chart, and——

The Court: I think I will strike out "In other areas." "The average customer . . .," I will leave it that way. I don't think it does any harm to the facts.

[fol. 2823] Mr. Alsup: I don't, either.

Mr. Coyle: It is a fact.

All right. Then down to this proposed Finding 42. The last sentence of Finding 42, we think, should read as follows——

The Court: You say the last sentence. What page?

Mr. Coyle: Page 21, line 5.

The Court: First point out what is erroneous about the sentence there.

Mr. Coyle: In the first place, this finding is taken verbatim from the pretrial conference order until it gets down to line 5. It is discussing general competition in the area. Then it says: "Competition between individual Von's and Shopping Bag Stores was limited to those instances . . ." We think it should be made clear that this competition is in contrast to the general competition.

We propose Language which would read——

The Court: I am going to leave that as is.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor doesn't want to hear the language I propose?

The Court: Isn't that the language you had in your——

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I think I took a look at it, counsel.

[fol. 2824] Mr. Coyle: All right.

The Court: Why do you think I asked for the time since yesterday to go further, again? I told you even yesterday that I had read over your—mostly your arguments, I spent quite a little time reading your arguments before I got down to the proposed additional findings. All about the El Paso Gas case. As if that had any bearing here. I don't see that it does. So take up the next matter.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I think this Finding 44, line 15 on page 21, I think it covers the same area as was covered by, I think, Finding 39, which was just eliminated.

The Court: I am going to leave that one. I think that's in keeping with what I found.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Finding 45 speaks of some of the successful firms operating in the area, but it doesn't mention the fact that there have been a lot of firms going out of business, also, in the area. I don't think it shows anything, really.

The Court: All right. Take up your next one. I am going to leave that as is.

Mr. Coyle: No. 46 on page 24, line 9, I think the language on lines 13 and 14, ". . . the capital requirements . . . are not great, and the chances of success for any experienced and qualified new entrant are good"—the chances of success aren't good, because more of them are going out of business [fol. 2825] than are coming in.

The Court: Well, there you go with that major premise again. Because the big stores have taken the place of 4 stores, your major premise is that they are being pushed out of business. And that is a major premise that I cannot accept. But I do agree with you I don't like that language.

". . . the capital requirements necessary to launch a enterprise for the retail sale of groceries is not great"—don't like that, either. They may or may not be great. It depends on the circumstances. "and the chances of success for any experienced and qualified new entrant are good." don't like the word "good." I don't like that.

In other words, the field is open, if you have sufficient capital and experience.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor used the word "successful" on page 10 of your Opinion, and on page 19 you pointed out that competition is vigorous and open to anyone.

The Court: That is in keeping with what I found. I didn say it was "good."

You could take out a graduate from the Harvard Business School and put him in the grocery business with unlimited capital, and he probably would be broke within the year because it takes experience to operate the grocery business. At least it did when I was a boy and worked in grocery [fol. 2826] stores, and I don't think it has changed. In those days, I suppose, if you sold a nickel's worth of crackers and cheese combined, you were making a substantial sale, but still you had to know how to do it, you had to know how to mix crackers and cheese and come out with a nickel's worth.

I think, counsel, we will have to revise this.

Mr. Alsup: How about eliminating everything after the first sentence, your Honor?

The Court: It is all one sentence.

Mr. Alsup: I mean eliminate from line 11 to and including 14.

The Court: I shall do that.

Mr. Coyle: Then going up to the line that is left, "There are no substantial barriers . . . " There is that word "no substantial."

The Court: That is my finding.

I think, counsel, today in Los Angeles in the oil business, for example, you would contend that a man would have a hard time going into the oil business and being successful. That would be my guess, that that would be your contention. But I would be willing, if there were enough involved, to step down off of this bench and open a station on any corner in any city in this area, and in two years I would have a substantial business. And do you know why? Service. But it [fol. 2827] would be a night and day job, 20 hours a day.

This is the thing in a lot of the grocery businesses around here. You may not know it, but there are people who are loyal to their old-time stores and go back, sometimes, even when they move a mile or two or five miles away, for a while they even go back to their old stores to buy merchandise. Because of what? Extra service.

Mr. Coyle: But I don't believe that is what the first sentence says. It says: "There are no substantial barriers to entry. . . ."

There are barriers, and they are substantial. You have to get the location, you have to get the capital——

The Court: I don't consider that to be barriers. I consider that to be in the economic pattern.

If you don't have a nickel, there is no reason to talk about the grocery business. You can't say, "I am broke, inexperienced, uneducated, but willing to borrow and open a grocery store." Don't think anybody is going to take you up.

Mr. Coyle: By "substantial barriers" you mean there is no law against opening grocery stores. But there are problems and it is difficult.

The Court: All right. Take up the next item.

I am convinced if you can't convince the Supreme Court in this case that there has been no substantial lessening of [fol. 2828] competition, that you are not going to have any effective success in the case, anyway. It seems to me we are concerning ourselves with some awfully small problems here, some of them. Go ahead, though. I will hear you out. The other litigants may wait.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, referring to 47 and 48, this excerpts part of the material from the figures compiled by the State Board of Equalization, and we propose that the tables, themselves, be made findings.

The Court: I think they are included in the findings, aren't they?

Mr. Coyle: No, your Honor. We propose them. We propose them as findings. Only parts of them are included here. In other words, these findings, if you refer to page 28 of our last objections——

The Court: I see in the morning paper there is a prediction that the punitive approach of the Antitrust Department is going to be curtailed. Do you have any comment on that, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: I wasn't aware that we had a punitive approach.

The Court: I just wondered.

Mr. Coyle: If we have one, it should be curtailed, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: May I say with reference to 47, your Honor, [fol. 2829] it is taken directly from the Opinion, bottom of 11 and 12, and based on the Lebhar affidavit.

Mr. Coyle: I am not objecting to the Opinion, but the proposed findings, on the grounds that it doesn't incorporate all the statistics in these various exhibits.

The Court: I will let it stand.

The next matter.

Mr. Coyle: Go down to Finding 50 on page 25, line 3.

The Court: Page what?

Mr. Coyle: Page 25, line 3, Finding 50. I think it uses all these words, "many," "open," when it should say "acquired," "usually beginning with a single store"——

The Court: I am going to let that stand, counsel. I have read it over very carefully and discussed it with them at a previous time, and I will let it stand. I think the evidence supports that conclusion.

Mr. Coyle: It is very loosely written.

The Court: It may well be, but we can't all be an H. L. Mencken when it comes to writing.

Mr. Coyle: Proposed Finding 52 on page 25. It starts at the bottom of page 25. "The merger of Shopping Bag into Von's did not materially change the competitive situation in the area."

[fol. 2830] It did change the competitive situation in the area; it united Von's and Shopping Bag. Where there had been two chains there was one.

The Court: I think that is inherent in the statement, counsel. We can't take it out of context and take just that one statement. Of course they did eliminate the competition between each other, such as existed.

Mr. Coyle: That is a material change in the competitive situation in the area. It is not a true statement to say it didn't change the competitive situation.

The Court: We are talking about lessening competition.

Mr. Coyle: Not there.

The Court: I will leave it stand.

The Clayton test—I thought the Senate Committee made it rather clear the original Clayton test was no longer the test.

Mr. Coyle: This is a finding of fact, your Honor.

The Court: I know. When you start to make findings, it takes an expert to distinguish sometimes between a combined conclusions of law and a statement of fact, conclusion of fact. It is pretty difficult.

It is too bad we are not back in the days when we had to draw bills of exceptions and had to be more exact. But the practice has now become a sort of rapid fire proposi-[fol. 2831] tion.

So I think under the modern practice this is probably good. I will let it stand. I think it is in keeping with the evidence.

Mr. Coyle: I just don't think it is an accurate statement.

The Court: All right. You can argue that when you get to the higher court.

Mr. Coyle: I think 53 is a conclusion, maybe. It is not a finding of fact, I don't think.

The Court: It is a combination of both, but I will let it stand. I think it wraps the two in one. I think you have conclusions of law wrapped into it. But it also is a statement of fact.

Mr. Coyle: Page 26, line 13, Proposed Finding 54, is vague. It doesn't state anything. It states: ". . . in only four or five limited portions of the entire Los Angeles Metropolitan Area." I think that is contrary to the evidence and it is meaningless, really.

The Court: I think I will put in the word "actually directly competing for some of the same customers in only four or five"——

Mr. Coyle: What were those four or five portions?

The Court: I haven't finished. Let me change it and [fol. 2832] then you may criticize it.

". . . in only four or five"—I suppose "areas" would be the word, wouldn't it?

Mr. Alsup: Or "communities," your Honor.

The Court: "Communities" I think would probably do it, or "areas."

Mr. Coyle: I don't know that there is any evidence of that. What is a community, your Honor?

The Court: I really don't have time to stop and define it, counsel.

Mr. Coyle: I think the findings should define it, and I think the findings are incomplete unless they do.

The Court: We will put it ". . . only four or five areas . . ."

Areas can be big, large, small or minute.

I think the facts in the case, taking them all as a whole, it is pretty clear what that means.

All right. Your next objection.

Mr. Coyle: Then what stores are we talking about?

The Court: The next objection, please.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, we used the word "communities" in line 18; since you have used the word "areas" there, perhaps you would like to use it here.

The Court: Yes, I will change it to "areas."

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, 57, 58 and 59 are legal con- [fol. 2833] clusions. I don't think they are proposed findings. They are legal conclusions, outright legal conclusions. I don't think they are even mixed statements of fact.

The Court: I will leave them stand, counsel. They may well be, in part, legal conclusions, but how can you in an Opinion, for example, separate your legal conclusions from your ultimate statements of fact? Sometimes you can't?

Mr. Coyle: I think statements like this are proper in an opinion but not in findings.

The Court: We will let the court refer to the Opinion, then.

Mr. Coyle: All right, your Honor.

Proposed Finding 60. Again, it only presents the openings; it doesn't present the closings.

The Court: I will let it stand. I think it is supported by the evidence.

Mr. Coyle: But it is argumentative and distorted, unless it also shows the closings.

The Court: I will let it stand.

Your next objection?

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we also object to this footnote "Statistics with respect to store openings in later years have not been made available."

They are available. I don't know what this purports [fol. 2834] to mean, but they are available. They just weren't introduced into evidence. Nobody bothered to get them. The Board of Equalization has them.

The Court: I will let it stand.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Proposed Finding 63 at the bottom of page 29, states, ". . . an increasing number of bantam stores or superettes . . . " I don't know what a bantam store is. I think the evidence shows they are small stores like a mom and pop. And they are decreasing in number instead of increasing.

The Court: I will let it stand. I think the evidence supports this. I don't think it has too much effect in the case, anyway.

Mr. Coyle: That may be so, your Honor.

The Court: I don't think it is decisive.

Mr. Coyle: The same with 64, it says, "Another development since the merger"—the top of page 30—"has been the opening of so-called drive-in milk depots."

I don't know whether that is before the merger or after the merger. I think they have been here for a good number of years, these milk depots.

The Court: I don't think the record supports that. There may have been a very few of them. But the ones they are talking about here are the ones opened in recent years.

[fol. 2835] I don't think it is of great concern, so take up something else, please.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Finding 74 on page 32.

The Court: One moment, counsel. I have been revising the original and I shouldn't have done it. I suppose it ought to be done over, I don't know. I marked up the copy, and I have been trying to change the original. I think it will have to be done over.

Mr. Alsup: I think it should be, your Honor, and we will be glad to do it.

The Court: All right. Let me go back a moment. You are on what page now?

Mr. Coyle: I skipped some of our objections. I am over on page 32.

The Court: Let's go back to page 26. I think the statement carries the wrong implication in line 29.

"Also, it is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer a company with good credit . . . "

That's not what they prefer. They prefer somebody with practically unlimited credit, and somebody who has a large corporation and a great deal of resources back of them. So I think that ought to be changed. That is on page 26. It carries the wrong connotation. Line 30.

They prefer more than just good credit.

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

[fol. 2836] The Court: When they go out to peddle a lease, they want to say, "We have leased to a "Store So-and-So, they are a nationally advertised name." This 25-year lease or 30-year lease, whatever is back of it, Kroeger or Safeway.

Mr. Alsup: I think the way your Honor phrased it in the Opinion is preferable.

The Court: How is that?

Mr. Alsup: "It is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer the company with the greater financial resources."

The Court: All right.

I have an original and a copy that I am working with, so it is rather difficult. You make that change.

Let's move along here. We have only 12 minutes left before the noon hour.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Proposed Finding 74——

The Court: Don't skip over 72. I don't like the language of 72.

Mr. Coyle: I don't like lots of this language, your Honor.

The Court: I am going to change that.

"The effect of the merger is insubstantial."

I don't know. If you want to say "not substantial"—— [fol. 2837] Mr. Alsup: I think that's preferable, your Honor.

Mr. Coyle: That same thing is repeated in about 15 of these findings.

The Court: It is nothing more than a conclusion, I agree with you. I will leave it in.

Mr. Alsup: Change the words to "not substantial"?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Alsup: Very good, your Honor.

The Court: I think you are right, it is a conclusion of law.

Mr. Coyle: About three of these pages are just argumentative conclusions.

The Court: I don't think they will do you any harm on the appeal.

Mr. Coyle: I don't think the findings will be helpful.

The Court: If you don't think they are, we are not helping the Supreme Court.

Mr. Coyle: I thought we would be able to get some better findings.

The Court: I am glad to know you have this great concern and want to help the court.

Mr. Coyle: Proposed Finding 74 on page 32, line 5.

[fol. 2838] "After the merger, Von's was operating a total of 64 stores—less than 1.4 per cent of the total number of stores in the two counties."

I think that is meaningless unless you show that Von's Stores had over $3,000,000 in sales.

The Court: All right. I will leave it stand.

What is next?

Mr. Coyle: Proposed Finding 75, your Honor, based almost entirely upon figures compiled by a man named Bouque, a witness Bouque, who was not called as a witness at the trial, who was thoroughly examined on his deposition and was discredited, and these statistics are just not reliable and not good statistics, these 1960 statistics. The court didn't rely on them in its Memorandum Opinion.

The Court: Are you speaking with respect to 75?

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor.

Mr. Alsup: I might say that Mr. Bouque had actual sales figures for Safeway in 1960, which were furnished by Safeway to the government. I have a copy of the letter by which they were transmitted to the government. Mr. Bouque used the actual sales figures for Safeway and for Von's in 1960.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor, but he had no universe to compute these percentages.

The Court: All right. I will let it stand.

[fol. 2839] Mr. Coyle: Proposed Finding 76 says: "Von's market share decreased after its merger with Shopping Bag."

In the first place, that is not so, and there is no evidence in the record to support that conclusion. Von's market share almost doubled after its merger with Shopping Bag. That was the effect of its merger.

The Court: Counsel, how do you justify that statement?

Mr. Alsup: I think counsel has a point. I think the combined share of the market of the two concerns would be a more accurate way to state that.

That is based on the Bouque analysis and on the testimony of Mr. Von der Ahe, which you elicited, your Honor, at the trial.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I don't think there was any real testimony of that. Market share was a percentage. There was no evidence of any percentage change after the merger. The merger occurred in March of 1960. Even Bouque didn't go beyond 1960.

The Court: Well, on this I am in doubt.

Mr. Alsup: Your Honor, if you are in doubt, let's eliminate it.

That was the testimony of Mr. Von der Ahe in response to a number of questions your Honor put to him.

The Court: I remember generally asking the questions, [fol. 2840] but it has been some time since the testimony, and this record is certainly voluminous.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure there was no testimony as to market shares—because nobody knows the market share unless you do a lot of research to do it.

The Court: I think that's true, I don't think we have the percentages. I think we had better eliminate 76, because I cannot say that that is really my finding.

Frankly, I don't think it is too great in importance.

Mr. Alsup: I don't either.

The Court: Let's eliminate it.

Mr. Coyle: Would you reconsider 75, your Honor? I think it has the same type——

The Court: Take up the next one.

Mr. Coyle: All right. Proposed Finding 77 says: "Both Von's and Shopping Bag were local concerns of local origin . . . "

Von's is still a local concern. I don't know what a local concern means.

The Court: I do. I will let it stand. If you don't, I do.

Mr. Coyle: Von's is traded on the New York Stock Exchange. It has——

The Court: Take up the next item.

[fol. 2841] Mr. Coyle: Subparagraph (a), the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company. I think that concern is 80 per cent owned by one family. I think that is almost a family-owned corporation. At least it was until a few years ago. I think that ought to be specified if they are going to describe A. & P.

The Court: I don't think that is of any particular importance. I will leave it the way it is.

Mr. Coyle: I have one other problem with these figures. In these subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), I am not sure what year they are referring to. Is it this year or last year, 1960?

The Court: I don't know.

Mr. Coyle: I am sure that some of those stores—I feel sure——

The Court: I thought it intended to refer to the last year available.

Mr. Alsup: We had a specific series of exhibits on that, and it is my recollection that it related to 1962, but I can check it.

The Court: I think when you rewrite this you had better put in the year.

Mr. Coyle: I would suggest that they also show Von's sales and assets for the same year, because I believe this is for the purpose of comparison. It may be that Von's [fol. 2842] has sales that are greater than the Lucky Stores.

The Court: We have already stated those.

Take up the next matter.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, we have this "local" in quotations on page 34, line 28. I don't know what that means, or what those quotations are supposed to mean.

The Court: The word "local" just accentuates what it means.

Mr. Coyle: Is that different from the "local" up above?

The Court: Without explaining it, I will let it stand.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, this Proposed Finding 80 is very argumentative, and it says—refers to Plaintiff's Exhibit 8 by number and sets forth part of the exhibit. I think the whole exhibit should be set forth.

The Court: I will let it stand.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I believe Proposed Finding 81 is very argumentative.

The Court: Well, I think it is in keeping with my findings. I will let it stand.

Mr. Coyle: Also 82 is very conclusory and argumentative.

The Court: I think in 82(b), "the most important chain" should come out, line 23. I think we substituted something [fol. 2843] a while back. You can use the same description there.

Safeway may think it is the most important, but others may not agree.

Next, counsel?

Mr. Coyle: Yes. Proposed Finding 83 refers to some of the prior mergers in the area, but it doesn't specify what those mergers are. We proposed some substitute language which would spell out the mergers which have been occurring in this area.

The Court: Well, I will let it stand. I think it is all right.

84 I have some question in my mind about.

Mr. Coyle: Yes, your Honor. I think that is very questionable.

The Court: That is, the first part of 84 there, where it says "is not an undue percentage share of the relevant market . . ." I don't think there is anybody alive that can tell what is undue and what is not.

I suppose the courts have taken upon themselves to decide these things, but what is an undue percentage share of a relevant market, it certainly presents a problem to me.

Mr. Alsup: It does to me, too, your Honor. The three-judge court in the Crocker-Citizens——

The Court: That is not a final decision, you know.

[fol. 2844] Mr. Alsup: That's right. They used that language——

The Court: You can't take any of these decisions until——

Mr. Alsup: I would be perfectly willing, your Honor, and suggest that we strike out "is not an undue percentage share of the relevant market," and leave in, "is not sufficient to warrant a finding . . ."

The Court: All right. I will do that.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, could I suggest that we consider eliminating using these two percentage figures in here?

Mr. Alsup: I think that would follow, your Honor, from what we agreed to before. I would suggest after the words "Shopping Bag" in line 8——

The Court: Strike out down to "is not sufficient to warrant"?

Mr. Alsup: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I agree. So done.

All right. Next, counsel.

Mr. Alsup: I think these subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) are very argumentative.

The Court: I think they are more or less in conclusion form and they do intertwine fact and the conclusions of law, [fol. 2845] but I will let them stand, counsel.

If we tried to separate conclusions of fact and conclusions of law, we would never finish this matter. Von's would probably by that time have got into another business. Maybe they would have merged with Eastman Kodak, or somebody.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, Proposed Finding 85, I think that that is the last one we objected to, that is also argumentative and conclusory, and I don't think it adds anything to the findings.

The Court: Well, I agree with that. It may be partially a conclusion of law, but I agree with it. I don't think there is any monopoly in this area at all, not at all.

Of course, I have heard the evidence and I have seen it with my own eyes, but maybe I am blinded.

Mr. Coyle: These findings, like Finding 85 and (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) of Finding 84, I think they are part of this general argumentative advocate's brief style that the findings were drafted in.

The Court: All right. What is next?

Mr. Coyle: That's it, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Prepare the findings as they have now been revised and present them to me and I will sign them.

There will be no further hearings on the matter.

[fol. 2846] Mr. Alsup: I will, your Honor.

May I just—perhaps your Honor doesn't want to bother with this, but on page 8, line 25 of the Opinion there is a typographical error which you might wish to correct.

The Court: What line?

Mr. Alsup: Line 25, page 8, there is a typographical error. It shows Von's sales at $98,000,000 when it should be $93,000,000.

The Court: That certainly ought to be corrected.

Mr. Alsup: That is from our Exhibit 5, Mr. Coyle.

The Court: I wonder how that got to be? It was just a typographical error, I suppose. What was that?

Mr. Alsup: $93,703,000.

The Court: Correct the original.

Mr. Alsup: There is a typographical error on page 3, line 6. I don't know whether you want to bother with this. It says "California corporation." Von's was a Delaware corporation.

The Court: What line?

Mr. Alsup: Page 3, line 6. "California" should read "Delaware."

The Court: That's right. It surely should.

Mr. Alsup: Line 32 of the same page, the "1933" should read "1930."

[fol. 2847] The Court: I don't see it at all.

Mr. Alsup: It should be "1930."

The Court: All right.

Mr. Coyle: You are changing this to "1930"? I am puzzled. This is the last line on page 3?

Mr. Alsup: Yes. It should be "since 1930."

Mr. Coyle: I am not sure. It says "1932."

Mr. Alsup: It said that as to Von's.

Mr. Coyle: It is a minor thing.

The Court: Anything further, gentlemen?

Mr. Alsup: Nothing further.

Mr. Coyle: Your Honor, I might suggest this. This thing is being printed. Maybe we should notify the printer?

The Court: Counsel, I have arrived at a point in this matter where I don't know whether it is humanly possible for the District Courts to carry on with the burden that is being placed upon them by the higher courts. It seems we have come to an age in the thinking where a District Judge is nothing more than a clerk or servant, and the volume of work and the effort that is required in this job, I don't know how the District Judges are going to keep up, between the writs and the Constitutional problems, and the many, many myriad matters that are pouring in upon us from all directions, and with all these new laws being enunciated by the higher courts, and with the volume of business that [fol. 2848] they have, it is just getting to the point where we don't have time to breathe. So a case of this kind, with a calendar such as I have, it is a real problem. And beginning January 1st two of us take the criminal calendar with an expectation of about six to seven hundred criminal cases for a period of six months, together with the remaining civil cases that I shall have on the calendar, which are about 140. So when all these hours are taken up with this minutiae, you can understand how exasperating it becomes to a lowly District Judge.

We are now in recess.

Plaintiff's Request for Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

Plaintiff, the United States of America, requests the Court to make the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

Findings of Fact

Jurisdiction

1. This is an action brought by the Attorney General of the United States to prevent and restrain an alleged violation by the defendants of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC § 18).* (Order, Part I.)

2. Plaintiff is the United States of America. The named defendants are Von's Grocery Company and Shopping Bag Food Stores.* (Order, Part I.)

3. Prior to March 28, 1960 the defendants operated as separate corporations; subsequent to March 28, 1960 they have operated as a single corporation, under the name Von's Grocery Co.* (Order, Part I.)

4. Defendants Von's Grocery Company and Shopping Bag Food Stores were found and transacted business within the Southern District of California (Central Division), and the surviving corporation, Von's Grocery Company, is found and transacts business within the Southern District of California (Central Division). (Order, Part III., pars. 6, 11, 20.)

5. Prior to the merger both defendants were engaged in interstate commerce and were subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. (Order, Part VIII, par. 1.)

6. The Court has jurisdiction to determine whether the merger of the defendants in this case violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act. (Order, Part VIII, par. 2.)

* An asterisk indicates that the proposed finding is a verbatim restatement of a stipulation between the parties which was incorporated in the Pre-Trial Conference Order of April 24, 1961, as amended.

Relevant Market

A. Line of Commerce

7. Groceries and related products consist of, but are not limited to, the following: groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs and sundries. They are the products taken as a whole which are generally distributed to the public by grocery stores and supermarkets. Taken as a whole these products constitute the relevant line of commerce in this case.* (Order, Part III, par. 17.)

8. Groceries and related products, taken as a whole, have peculiar characteristics and uses in the operation of retail grocery stores which make them distinguishable from all other products. (Order, Part VIII, par. 8.)

9. Groceries and related products are the relevant line of commerce for determining whether this merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. (Order, Part VIII, par. 9.)

B. Section of the Country

10. The relevant trade are in which the defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties.* (Order, Part III, par. 20.)

11. Combined Los Angeles County and Orange County have also been defined by the Bureau of the Census as the Los Angeles Metropolitan area since, taken together, they meet the tests set by the Department of Commerce in terms of population and commercial interchange.* (Order, Part III, par. 21.)

12. Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income, and retail dollar sales.* (Order, Part III, par. 22.)

13. Approximately 6,750,000 persons reside in the Los Angeles Metropolitan area, and total retail sales in the area were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957, representing 42% of all California retail sales, 33% of total retail sales on the Pacific coast, and 25% of such sales in the 11 Western States.* (Order, Part III, par. 23.)

14. In 1960 only seven States in the United States had larger populations than the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. (GX 2)

15. In 1960 the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area has a larger population than the combined populations of the 11 smallest States in the United States and the District of Columbia. (GX 3)

16. The Los Angeles Metropolitan area is more than a community. It is an appreciable trade area and a section of the country within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.* (Order, Part III, par. 25.)

17. The Los Angeles Metropolitan area is the relevant section of the country for determining the effect of this merger. (Order, Part VIII, par. 12.)

C. Trade and Commerce in the Relevant Market

18. Sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles trade area are in the neighborhood of $2.5 billion annually.* (Order, Part III, par. 26.)

19. Such products are produced, manufactured, processed or packaged by numerous suppliers located throughout the United States.* (Order, Part III, par. 27.)

20. A substantial volume of groceries and related products originates outside the State of California and is shipped into the Los Angeles area where it represents approximately 51% of all retail sales of such products.* (Order, Part III, par. 28.)

21. These products are shipped by air, truck, rail, and sea transportation into the Los Angeles area and subsequently sold by the defendants and other retail grocery firms to consumers in the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 29.)

22. In order to maintain a supply of such products at all times, the defendants and other retail grocery firms in the Los Angeles area purchase and distribute, or cause the distribution to their stores of new products to replenish or replace products sold. In the course of such distribution some of the products handled by the defendants are warehoused in their distribution center and some are not.* (Order, Part III, par. 30.)

23. Some groceries and related products are perishable and must be sold to the ultimate consumer in a very short time.* (Order, Part III, par. 31.)

24. Annual turnover in all of Von's and Shopping Bag's stores for the year 1960 for each of the company's divisions and for all products combined was as follows: Grocery, 15.26; Meat, 72.33; Produce, 10.04; Delicatessen, 29.15 Liquor, 7.80; Drug, 5.57; Department Stores, 2.71; Fountain, 28.76; and all products combined, 17.06. (GX 9)

25. A number of chains in the Los Angeles area operate purchasing offices staffed by full-time employees who are in contact with suppliers located throughout the United States to secure and effect the shipment of substantial quantities of groceries and related products into the Los Angeles area from facilities located outside the State of California.* (Order, Part III, par. 32.)

26. The buyers of groceries and related products employed by some of these chains occasionally make trips to other States and foreign countries to arrange the purchase and shipment of groceries and related products into the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 33.)

27. As a result of their buying operations, substantial quantities of groceries and related products which are produced or manufactured outside the State of California are shipped to distribution centers operated by the supermarket chains from which points they are delivered in trucks operated by the chains to the chains' retail stores for sale to consumers in the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 34.)

28. Employees of Von's, both before and since the merger, have made a number of trips outside the State of California for the purpose of arranging for the purchase of various products for resale in Von's retail stores. (GX 10)

29. Since prior to 1958, Von's operated a distribution center at 2700 Garfield Avenue, Vernon, California, serviced by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad. (GX 10)

30. Since prior to 1958, Shopping Bag maintained a distribution center at 10150 Lower Azusa Road, El Monte, California, which was and is serviced by the Southern Pacific Railroad. This distribution center is now operated by Von's. (GX 10)

31. Since prior to 1958, and until February 1960, Shopping Bag maintained a distribution center at 1825 East 27th Street, Vernon, California, which was likewise serviced by the Southern Pacific Railroad. (GX 10)

32. No records maintained by either company reflect the actual value, tonnage or carloads of products produced outside of California and shipped by rail to the distribution centers listed in paragraphs 29, 30 and 31 above. (GX 10)

33. Both Von's and Shopping Bag had received shipments by truck at the distribution centers referred to in paragraphs 29, 30 and 31 above. Hundreds of truck lines have made such shipments in the years 1958, 1959 and 1960. No records maintained by either defendant reflect the value, tonnage or truckloads of products produced outside California and shipped by truck to either company at any of said distribution centers. (GX 10)

34. Both Von's and Shopping Bag have occasionally in 1958, 1959 and 1960 received products produced outside California and shipped to California by air or sea transportation. No records maintained by either company reflect the value or poundage of such products. (GX 10)

35. Both Von's and Shopping Bag have occasionally in 1958, 1959 and 1960 received products produced outside California which were delivered directly to retail stores operated by them. No records maintained by either company reflect the value or poundage of such products. (GX 10)

36. A substantial quantity, if not the greater percentage of products sold by Von's and Shopping Bag in their retail stores, were and are produced outside of the State of California. (GX 10)

37. Warehouse facilities are necessary to Von's operation in order to maintain inventory control. (GX 11)

38. Such control is necessary in order to maintain a consistent supply of merchandise in Von's stores. (GX 11)

39. In order to maintain inventory control, it was necessary for Von to operate a fleet of 33 tractors and 39 trailers prior to the merger. (GX 11)

40. Each Von store receives at least one delivery of produce daily. (GX 11)

41. Each Von store receives from two to four deliveries of dry groceries every week. (GX 11)

42. In addition to groceries and related products which pass through their own warehouses, the defendants and other retailers in the Los Angeles area also received from other sources groceries and related products which originate from suppliers located throughout the United States. (Order, Part III, pars. 35-40.)

43. Numerous retailers in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area also receive from cooperatives groceries and related products which originated from suppliers located throughout the United States.* (Order, Part III, par. 35.)

44. These cooperatives maintain warehouses and distribution centers which receive direct shipments of substantial quantities of groceries and related products from producing facilities located in various states and distribute such products in trucks to the retail stores operated by their members, pusuant to orders from such members.* (Order, Part III, par. 36.)

* An asterisk indicates that the proposed finding is a verbatim restatement of a stipulation between the parties which was incorporated in the Pre-Trial Conference Order of April 24, 1961, as amended.

45. Such cooperatives also maintain full time buying offices which are in contact with suppliers located throughout the country to effectuate the purchase and shipment to the Los Angeles area of groceries and related products. Such products are generally sold in retail grocery stores operated by the members of the cooperatives, but some cooperatives sell to non-members.* (Order, Part III, par. 37.)

46. Numerous producers, manufacturers, processors and packagers of groceries and related products located outside the State of California are represented by food brokers and manufacturers representatives in the Los Angeles area who arrange for the distribution of their products to retail grocery firms in the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 39.)

47. These brokers and manufacturers' representatives secure the shipment of products from warehouses located either inside or outside the state to retail grocery firms, cooperatives or other wholesalers in the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 40.)

48. In the course of their business both defendants purchased, received at their distribution centers, and sold in their supermarkets a substantial volume of groceries and related products which were produced outside of the State of California, and which represented approximately 51% of all retail sales by the defendants.* (Order, Part III, par. 16.)

49. Von and Shopping Bag, prior to the merger, were engaged in interstate commerce and Von presently is engaged in interstate commerce.* (Order, Part III, par. 41.)

D. Competition in the Relevant Market

50. Consumer shopping patterns for groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are based upon a number of variables. (Corey Dep., pp. 10-11; Bouque Dep., p. 48; Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, p. 412.)

51. Some of the factors which are taken into consideration by customers in selecting the store at which they shop are: price, general appearance of the store, size of the store, variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, variety of produce, checkstand service and cleanliness of the store. (Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, p. 412; Corey Dep., pp. 10-11.)

52. Grocery shoppers are willing to pass other stores in order to arrive at the store which best satisfies their shopping needs. (Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, pp. 411-412; Corey Dep., pp. 57-59; Hayden Dep., pp. 5-6.)

53. Von-Shopping Bag considers the over-all draw area of its stores to be 5 miles. (W. D. Hayden Dep., p. 5.)

54. The average customer in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is willing to drive for at least ten minutes, about 4 miles, in order to do grocery shopping. (Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, pp. 398-399.)

55. Between 10 and 37 percent of all customers of Von and Shopping Bag stores come from outside the immediate trading area of the Von-Shopping Bag stores. (Bouque Dep., p. 46; Von der Ahe, Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 240-246.)

56. Loss of a major part of the customers residing outside of its immediate draw area would be a serious problem and Von would be forced to increase its competitive efforts to regain this trade. (Von der Ahe, Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 240-246.)

57. Stores of the leading chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are so located that there is a network of competition between them. (GX 84; Order, Part III, par. 46; Brown Tr. 6/14/63, p. 335.)

58. The leading chains in the area, as a result of this network of interlocking competition, are a part of the same competitive pattern and the activity of one chain directly or indirectly affects the other chains. (GX 84; Order, Part III, par. 46; Brown Tr. 6/14/63, p. 335.)

59. This interlocking network of competition has resulted in the utilization of certain identical competitive practices by the chains such as the widespread adoption of trading stamps by all chains and the response of other chains to Von's efforts to eliminate loss leaders. (Brown Tr. 6/14/63, p. 335; Von der Ahe Tr. p. 320; Order, Part III, par. 46.)

60. Prior to the merger the 20 leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and as such each of these chains competed with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As part of the competition, the major chains as well as other grocers frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains.* (Order, Part III, par. 46, as amended.)

61. In 1958 the 20 leading chains of supermarkets operating in the Los Angeles area competed intensively with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area. (Answer of Complaint par. 6.)

62. The 20 leading chains of supermarkets referred to in paragraph 61 above competed in the following activities: (GX 12)

"(a) Competition to purchase supplies and merchandise on better terms than their competitors and to secure other purchasing advantages.

(b) Competition to distribute products cheaper and to secure advantages in the distribution of products to their retail outlets.

(c) Competition to increase the sale of groceries in their stores and to secure other selling advantages over each other.

(d) Competition in advertising and promotional activities.

(e) Competition to secure new store locations."

Defendants

A. Description of Von

63. Defendant Von's Grocery Co. (hereinafter referred to as Von) is a publicly held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware. At the time the complaint was filed it maintained its principal offices in Los Angeles, California. Subsequent to the merger, Von moved its offices to the former Shopping Bag Headquarters at El Monte, California.* (Order, Part III, par. 6.)

64. Von is one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. It is the successor of incorporated and unincorporated businesses which have been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products since 1932.* (Order, Part III, par. 7.)

65. In the 1959 fiscal year, Von operated 28 complete supermarkets in the Los Angeles area which had total annual sales of approximately $85 million for an average of approximately $3 million in sales per store. All of the Von supermarkets are of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.* (Order, Part III, par. 8.)

66. Prior to the merger, Von also owned and operated a modern distribution center in a 216,000 square foot building located on a 20-acre tract of land in the Los Angeles area. Direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute groceries and related products to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area. Von owned and operated approximately 33 tractors and 39 trailers which it used for transporting merchandise from the distribution center to the various supermarkets.* (Order Part III, par. 9.)

* An asterisk indicates that the proposed finding is a verbatim restatement of a stipulation between the parties which was incorporated in the Pre-Trial Conference Order of April 24, 1961, as amended.

B. Description of Shopping Bag

67. Prior to March 28, 1960, defendant Shopping Bag Food Stores (hereinafter referred to as Shopping Bag) was a publicly held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California and maintained its principal offices in El Monte, California. On March 28, 1960, Shopping Bag was merged into Von and the separate corporate existence of Shopping Bag was terminated on that date.* (Order, Part III, par. 11.)

68. Prior to its merger into Von, Shopping Bag was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. It was the successor to incorporated and unincorporated business entities which had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area since 1933. In the 1959 fiscal year, Shopping Bag operated 36 complete supermarkets in the Los Angeles area which had total annual sales of approximately $79 million for an average of approximately $2.1 million in sales per store. All of the Shopping Bag Stores were of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.* (Ord., III, ¶ 12.)

69. Immediately prior to the merger, Shopping Bag also operated a substantial distribution center which was served directly by railroad and truck, and which received and distributed groceries and related products to Shopping Bag supermarkets. To facilitate distribution to its supermarkets Shopping Bag owned and operated a fleet of trucks, trailers, and automobiles comprising about 166 units in all.* (Order, Part III, par. 13.)

C. Position of the Defendants in the Relevant Market

70. Prior to the merger both defendants were competitive factors in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.* (Order, Part III, par. 47.)

* An asterisk indicates that the proposed finding is a verbatim restatement of a stipulation between the parties which was incorporated in the Pre-Trial Conference Order of April 24, 1961, as amended.

71. The order and importance of retail chains in the Los Angeles area can be found in various statistical tables. One such table appearing in Food Topics Magazine was used by the Government in preparing Government's Exhibit 8 for the hearing on the preliminary injunction and was introduced by the defendants as Exhibit A in that hearing. The parties agree that it is accurate in certain respects. However, both parties clearly understand that this table is an estimate and may introduce other statistics and figures which are at variance with estimates appearing in the Food Topics table.* (Order, Part III, par. 48.)

72. The Food Topics Magazine study was for 1958, the last complete normal year prior to the merger; in 1959 a four-week strike closed most stores of the leading chains and the merger occurred in March 1960. (De Silva Aff. GX 91, pp. 2-3; Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 229-230.)

73. In 1958 Von ranked third and Shopping Bag fifth in terms of total sales by grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Von had approximately 4.1% and Shopping Bag approximately 3.9% of all grocery store sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, as reported in the Food Topics Magazine study, which is discussed below. Shopping Bag ranked sixth and Von eighth in terms of total number of markets operated in this area in the same year.* (Order, Part III, par. 14.)

74. On the basis of Food Topics Magazine combined Von and Shopping Bag rank second in terms of dollar sales and in terms of total number of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Following the merger Von's total assets were approximately $42 million and it accounted for approximately 8% of all grocery store sales in the area.* (Order, Part III, par. 15.)

75. Information compiled by the Federal Bureau of Investigation from the defendants and in direct interviews with retail grocery chains in the area, and used by the defendants in preparing certain exhibits, demonstrates that the industry rank and percentage share of the ten leading grocery chains in the area were as follows in 1958: (GX 4)

Position of Von and Shopping Bag Among the Ten Largest Grocery Chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area

	1958 Rank in Sales Before Merger	1958 Rank in Sales After Merger	Sales in Los Angeles Metropolitan Area	Percentage
			Dollars
Total of Von and Shopping Bag	—	1	$177,867,000	8.9
Safeway	1	2	161,233,000	8.0
Ralph's	2	3	128,283,000	6.4
Von	3	—	93,703,000	4.7
Market Basket	4	4	88,806,000	4.4
Thriftimart	5	5	88,583,000	4.4
Shopping Bag	6	—	84,164,000	4.2
Food Giant	7	6	72,727,000	3.6
Alpha Beta Raisins	8	7	62,727,000	3.1
Fox Markets	9	8	56,438,000	2.8
Mayfair	10	9	39,360,000	2.0

76. The only material difference between the rank and market share percentages shown in GX 4 set forth above and the dollar sale and market share statistics shown by Food Topics is that the Food Topics' study indicated that the combined Von and Shopping Bag sales did not equal Safeway's sales. However, the defendants now accept the information obtained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation as accurate in this respect. (GX 4)

77. Prior to the merger both defendants competed effectively against Safeway.* (Order, Part III, par. 49.)

78. Prior to the merger Von and Shopping Bag both experienced substantial growth in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. (GX 5)

79. In the period between 1954 and 1958 Von's total sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area increased from $64 million to almost $94 million and Shopping Bag's total sales increased from $55 million to $84 million. (GX 5)

80. From the beginning of 1955 to the beginning of 1960, the total number of Von stores in operation increased from 22 to 28, while in the same period the total number of

Shopping Bag stores increased from 24 to 38. (GX 13, GX 14, GX 15)

81. As of March 28, 1960, Von planned to construct six new stores and Shopping Bag planned to construct one. (GX 16)

82. Between 1949 and 1959, both defendants expanded into new areas, increased the number of their stores in operation, and increased their total dollar sales.* (Order, Part III, par. 51.)

83. In 1946 the Shopping Bag stores were largely in the northeast part of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and the Von stores, in the southwest part of the Area (GX 79); by 1950 there was a movement of both firms out of their respective areas (GX 80); this movement continued to 1955 (GX 81); by 1960 both chains had expanded well out of the areas in which they were located in 1946 with the result that each chain had stores located throughout the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area (GX 82).

84. By 1960 the defendants admit that 20 per cent of the stores operated by Von and Shopping Bag were so located that they competed with each other for some or all of the same customers. The stores which the defendants admit competed with each other are listed below (Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 203-212; DX AV):

(a) Von's store No. 27 at 15704 Whitwood Lane, Whittier, completely with Shopping Bag store No. 1 at 1611 West Whittier Lane, La Habra; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(b) Von's store No. 27 competed with Shopping Bag store No. 21 at 1183 Quad Way, Whittier; the stores were 2½ miles apart.

(c) Von's store No. 29 located at 1000 East Valley, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 27 at 127 North Garfield, Monterey Park; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(d) Von's store No. 4 at 2280 Atlantic Avenue, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 27; the stores were 3 miles apart.

(e) Von's store No. 31 at 973 South Glendora, West Covina, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 28 at 15427 Amar Road, La Puente; the stores were 1 mile apart.

(f) Von's store No. 31 at 973 South Glen, West Covina, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 32 at 1170 West Garvey Boulevard, West Covina; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(g) Von's store No. 26 at 12156 Brookhurst Avenue, Garden Grove, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 33 at 9922 Catella, Anaheim; the stores were 1 mile apart.

(h) Von's store No. 5 at 10001 Paramount Boulevard, Downey, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 35 at 9050 East Firestone Boulevard, Downey; the stores were 2 miles apart.

85. In addition to the competition admitted by the defendants, a study, based upon 2-mile draw areas, showed that the following Von and Shopping Bag stores competed for some or all of the same customers at the time of the merger (Bouque Aff., pp. 31, 32, 76):

(a) Von's store No. 4 at 2280 Atlantic Boulevard, Monterey Park, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 40 at 1201 West Whittier, Montibello.

(b) Von's store No. 29 at 1000 East Valley Boulevard, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 16 at 2200 West Valley Boulevard, Alhambra, as well as Shopping Bag store No. 11 at 2270 Huntington Drive, San Marino.

(c) Von's store No. 27 at 15740 Whitwood Lane, Whittier, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 22 at 9140 East Whittier, Pico.

86. Twelve existing Von stores and 20 existing Shopping Bag stores were so located in 1960 that both a Von and a Shopping Bag store would be within a 10-minute driving time, representing a distance of approximately 4 miles, of the same potential customers. (GX 85; Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, pp. 397-403.)

87. An estimated one million customers, representing an approximate annual food expenditure of $481 million were so situated in 1960 that they could shop at either a Von or a Shopping Bag store within a 10-minute driving time, representing a distance of approximately 4 miles. (GX 85; Jenssen Tr. 6/14/63, pp. 397-403.)

88. Defendants admit that the competition was intensive in those instances where a store of Von's and a store of Shopping Bag were so located that they could both compete for some of the same customers. (Order, Part III, par. 46, as amended.)

89. Subsequent to the merger Von cancelled plans to open a new Shopping Bag store at Mission Road and Belvoir Avenue in Grenada Hills because it would have competed with an existing Von store. (Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, p. 218.)

90. Prior to the merger both Shopping Bag and Von were among the five chains listed in a widely distributed pricing service which carried an item by item analysis of the prices charged by the leading grocery chains in the area. (GX 21)

91. Subsequent to the merger, Shopping Bag was eliminated from the pricing study described in paragraph 90 above and was replaced by another grocery chain. (GX 22)

92. Prior to the merger Von and Shopping Bag watched each others advertising in the Metropolitan papers as well as the advertising of the other major chains. (GX 23, GX 24, GX 25, GX 26)

93. Prior to the merger, chains such as Von, Shopping Bag, Safeway, Ralph's Market Basket, Thriftimart and Food Giant checked the others prices. (GX 23)

94. Prior to the merger Von's Grocery Co. and Shopping Bag took into consideration the prices which the other charged, as well as the prices charged by the other leading chains, in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in determining prices to be charged. (GX 23, GX 24, GX 25, GX 26)

95. Such chains, however, did not customarily check the price of the so-called Mom and Pop stores (the smaller stores). (GX 23)

96. In 1959, the last full year prior to the merger, Von's total advertising expenditures exceeded $738,000 and Shopping Bag's total expenditures exceeded $1,187,000. (GX 17)

97. Von and Shopping Bag were among the eleven retail grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which did area-wide advertising prior to the merger. (GX 18)

98. Von and Shopping Bag were also among the relatively few retail grocery chains in the area doing radio and television advertising. (GX 17, GX 18, GX 19)

99. In 1959 Von received advertising allowances of approximately $227,000 and Shopping Bag, $304,000. (GX 20)

100. In the years 1957, 1958 and 1959, Von enjoyed profits of $3.9 million, $4.0 million and $4.1 million, respectively, before provision for Federal Income Taxes. (GX 27)

101. In the years 1957, 1958 and 1959, respectively, Shopping Bag enjoyed profits of $2.7 million, $1.9 million and $1.5 million before provision for Federal Income Taxes. (GX 27)

102. Both Von and Shopping Bag had experienced profitable operations in the three years prior to the merger. (GX 27)

103. For the years 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1958, the average income earned on invested capital, before taxes and interest, was as follows: Von, 42.0%; Shopping Bag, 28.1%. (GX 28)

104. On the basis of total sales, industry rank, percentage, market share, assets, advertising, promotion ability, expansion potential, earnings, financial stability, number of stores in operation, impact upon prices and consumer acceptance, both defendants in this case were substantial competitive factors in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area prior to their merger. (Order, Part III, pars. 6 through 52; GX 4, GX 5, GX's 9 through 23; GX 27, GX 29, GX 30, G 31, GX 32)

Relevant Market Structure

105. In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 20 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 43.8 per cent; in 1958, it was 56.9 per cent. (GX 6, GX 7)

106. In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 16 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 41.6 per cent; in 1958, it was 53.4 per cent. (GX 7)

107. In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 12 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 38.8 per cent; in 1958, it was 48.8 per cent. (GX 7)

108. In the year 1948 the market share represented by the 8 leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 33.7 per cent; in 1958, it was 40.9 per cent. (GX 7)

109. The four leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area accounted for 24.4 per cent of all grocery store sales in 1958. The merger of oVn and Shopping Bag increased the market share of the top 4 to 28.8 per cent, based upon 1958 sales on a pro form abasis. (GX 8)

110. As a result of the merger between Von and Shopping Bag, the market share of the 4 largest chains in the store sales in 1958. The merger of Von and Shopping Bag based upon 1958 sales on a pro form a basis. (GX 8)

111. Since the beginning of World War II and particularly the last 15 years, Los Angeles has been one of the most rapidly expanding areas in the United States.* (Order, Part III, par. 24.)

112. In the last 20 years there has been an increase in the size of individual retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area.* (Order, Part III, par. 42.)

113. Since 1940 there has been a decrease in the number of grocery stores in operation in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.* (Order, Part III, par. 44.) (Government Industry Witnesses.)

114. In the period between January 1, 1950 and January 1, 1963, the total number of grocery stores licensed to operate in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area decreased by 1,673. (GX 33, GX 34, GX 35)

115. On January 1, 1950, the records of the State Board of Equalization indicate that there were 5,365 single outlet grocery stores and 856 multiple outlet grocery stores operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area for a total of 6,221 stores. By January 1, 1961, the total number of single outlet grocery stores was 3,818 and the number of multiple outlet grocery stores was 923 for a total of 4,741. By January 1, 1963, the number of single outlet grocery stores was 3,590 and the number of multiple outlet grocery stores was 958 for a total of 4,548. (GX 33, GX 34, GX 35)

116. On January 1, 1950, there were 1.4383 grocery stores per thousand population in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area; and on January 1, 1961 there were .6950 grocery stores per thousand population in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. (GX 33, GX 34)

117. Single outlet stores have been declining in numerical count and multiple outlet stores, particularly those controlled by the large chains, account for the bulk of the business done under newly obtained permits. (GX 33 through GX 43; Affidavit of John B. Marshall.)

118. In 1953 there were 704 chain grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and by 1962 the total number of chain grocery stores increased to 1,085. (GX 74)

119. In 1953 chains of 10 or more stores accounted for 57.4 per cent of all chain grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and by 1962 they accounted for 68.2 per cent. (GX 74)

120. In 1953 the 40 chains with the most grocery stores operated 574 stores; by 1962 the 24 chains with the most grocery stores operated 739 stores. (GX 75)

121. In 1953 chains of two or more stores accounted for approximately 12.7 per cent of all grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area; by 1962 they accounted for 23.6 per cent of all of such stores. (GX 76)

122. There is a very high percentage of discontinuance of permits by small, single outlet stores compared to a relatively small percentage of such discontinuances by the large chains. (GX 33 through GX 43; Affidavit of John B. Marshall.)

123. During the period between 1949 and 1958, 9 of the largest chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area acquired 126 grocery stores from concerns outside the top 20 chains. (GX 44)

124. In 1958, 99 of the stores referred to in paragraph 123 were still operated by the acquiring chains and had sales of $192.9 million. (GX 45)

125. Without the acquired stores referred to in paragraphs 123 and 124 above, the market share of the top 20 chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1958 would drop from 56.9 per cent to 47.3 per cent. (Affidavit of Willard F. Mueller.)

126. There were other significant acquisitions and mergers occurring in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which supplement those listed in GX 44 for the period from 1949 through 1958. (Defense witness Godfrey Lebhar, GX 78.)

127. There have been additional significant acquisitions and mergers (including Von's and Shopping Bag) within the retail grocery industry in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area subsequent to the period of time covered by GX 44. (Defense witness Godfrey Lebhar, GX 78; Government's industry witnesses.)

128. It is recognized in the industry that there has been a decline in the total number of stores serving the area; the combined market shares of the large chains is increasing; consolidations and mergers have played an important part in increasing concentration; single store operators are at a disadvantage in attempting to compete with the major chains; and only the chains with triple A financial ratings are considered for sites in major shopping centers. (Government industry witnesses.)

The Merger

129. Sometime in the latter part of 1957 or the early part of 1958, Mr. Theodore A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, approached Shopping Bag and initiated the merger talks which led to the subject merger. (GX 46)

130. Prior to commencing negotiations with Shopping Bag, Von's had discussed possible mergers with Kroger's and Alexanders Markets. (Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 181-182.)

131. In 1957 when the merger negotiations were begun, Shopping Bag's profits were at an all time high. (Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, p. 231.)

132. On March 28, 1960, the merger of Von and Shopping Bag was consummated. (Order, Part III, paras. 4, 11.)

133. As a result of the merger, Von and Shopping Bag were united under a single management, subject to the control of a single board of directors and a single group of officers. The combined defendants have secured competitive advantages in that their warehousing functions are united in a single operation, their advertising is consolidated, the search for new locations is now the responsibility of one organization instead of two, the inventory in the stores has been adjusted with the result that the stores of both chains now carry the same lines and the stores are now known as "Von's Shopping Bag." (Order, Part III, pars. 4, 6, 10, 11 and 41; GX 9, GX 10, GX 11, GX 21, GX 22, GX 23, GX 27; GX 47 through GX 71; Von der Ahe Tr. 6/13/63, pp. 252-257; Government industry witnesses.)

Conclusions of Law

1. Prior to the merger both defendants were engaged in interstate commerce and were subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

2. Prior to the merger both defendants transacted business and were found within the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California (Central Division).

3. The merger of the defendants in this case is an acquisition covered by Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

4. The Court has jurisdiction to determine whether the merger of the defendants in this case violated amended Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

5. Groceries and related products, taken as a whole, is the relevant line of commerce in which to determine whether this merger violated amended Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

6. The Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is the relevant section of the country in which to determine whether the merger violated amended Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

7. The effect of the merger of the defendants may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the relevant line of commerce in the relevant section of the country.

8. The merger of the defendants in this case violated amended Section 7 of the Clayton Act and plaintiff is entitled to appropriate equitable relief.

Respectfully submitted, /s/ James J. Coyle, /s/ John F. Hughes, /s/ Malcolm F. Knight, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

STIPULATION AFTER TRIAL—ordered March 23, 1964

The parties hereto through their respective counsel of record hereby stipulate to the facts set forth below:

In entering this stipulation the parties reserve all their rights to object as to the relevancy or materiality of any fact herein contained.

1. Statistics provided by the State Board of Equalization [1] show that on January 1, 1961, the total number of single outlet grocery stores operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 3,818, and the total number of multiple outlet stores [2] was 923 for a total of 4,741.

2. Statistics provided by the State Board of Equalization [1] show that on January 1, 1963, the total number of single outlet grocery stores operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 3,590, and the total number of multiple outlet stores was 958 for a total of 4,548.

3. The following table shows the breakdown of the concerns operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1962:

[1] Defendant continues to take the position that statistics provided by the State Board of Equalization are inaccurate. Defendant concedes, however, that it is not aware of any other statistics with respect to the total number of grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties which are accurate.

[2] A multiple outlet store is defined as a grocery store owned or operated by a chain of two or more stores.

Concerns Operating	No. of Concerns
10 or more stores	24
4 to 9 stores	22
2 to 3 stores	104
1 store	3,709
Total	3,859

4. The following table compares the number of stores operated by and the combined market share of the 20 largest chains in the area in 1958 with the smaller chains and independents.[3]

	No. of Stores	Market Share
		Govt. Figures	Def. Fig.
Top 20 chains	598	56.9%	54.3%
Independents and smaller chains	4,301	43.1	45.7

5. On September 3, 1963, Kroger Company, the nation's third largest grocery chain in terms of total dollar sales, which was not then operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, acquired the Market Basket Chain, one of the largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in terms of total dollar sales. This acquisition is being investigated by the Federal Trade Commission to determine if a suit should be instituted charging a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

6. In recent years a number of supermarket chains and other firms in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area have opened supermarket operations in discount houses.

7. Some of these chains and other firms have dry grocery departments, meat departments, and produce departments in their discount store operations, but others do not have all three departments (i.e., some will only have dry groceries). The inventory carried in the departments in discount stores varies.

8. At the time of trial all but ten of the grocery operations in discount stores were operated by firms which were operating supermarkets in shopping centers or in other locations, and five of these ten discount store operations carried complete lines of meat, produce, and dry groceries.

[3] Since the parties have not been able to stipulate as to market share figures, this table shows the figures advocated by both parties.

9. Since the trial, five additional operations have been opened in discount houses. Three of these newly opened departments are operated by firms which also operate supermarkets in shopping centers or in other locations in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

10. The following is a list of the five discount houses which have been opened since the trial. It shows the name of the firm which operates the outlet in the discount store:

(a) "Unimart" (operated by Food Giant) at 2270 Bellflower Boulevard, Long Beach, Los Angeles County;

(b) "White Front" (operated by Supreme Foods Co.) at 9725 Laurel Canyon Boulevard, Pacoima, Los Angeles County;

(c) "Big A" at 14200 East Rosecrans Boulevard, La Mirada, Los Angeles County;

(d) "Huntington Fantastic Food City" (operated by Food Fair) at 16672 Beach Boulevard, Huntington Beach, Orange County; and

(e) "Crown Budget Department Store" at 3731 West Warner Street, Santa Ana, Orange County.

11. No statistics were introduced into evidence to show the share of total retail grocery sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which is represented by supermarkets operated in discount houses.

12. The Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. is a co-operative which distributes dry groceries and other products.

13. Certified only sells to its members.

14. Spartan Cooperative formerly operated in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area as a separate concern, but it was acquired by Certified in 1957 and is a subsidiary of that firm.

15. Spartan only sells to its members.

16. Orange Empire is operated by A. M. Lewis, Inc., a grocery wholesaler with operations in the States of Arizona and Nevada, and the California counties of Riverside, San Diego, and San Bernardino in addition to its operations in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

17. The Orange Empire operation of A. M. Lewis, Inc. only sells to its members.

18. The parties are in disagreement as to whether Orange Empire is a cooperative or a grocery wholesaler.

Dated: March 20, 1964.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 9

SUPPLEMENTAL INTERROGATORY No. 8

The following statement appears in paragraph 5 of defendants' answer, as amended:

> "Such products are usually retained for a period of time in warehouses or distribution centers maintained by said grocery companies or by said brokers, jobbers, wholesalers or wholesale cooperatives, as the case may be, before being shipped by truck to the retail stores owned or operated by said grocery companies."

With respect to this statement, supply the following information:

A. State whether defendants have any knowledge as to the length of time such products are retained in warehouses or distribution centers maintained by firms in each of the following categories:

(1) Grocery companies;
(2) Brokers;
(3) Jobbers;
(4) Wholesalers; and
(5) Wholesale co-operatives.

If so, set forth the average length of time such products are retained in the warehouses or distribution centers of firms in each of the categories set forth above with respect to all products combined, and with respect to each product category listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7), for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960.

B. State whether defendants have any knowledge as to the average number of inventory turnovers in the yearly operation of firms in each of the categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 8, paragraph A (1) through (5). If so, set forth the rate of turnover for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960, for each such category of firm for all products combined and for each product category listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

C. Set forth for the average firm in each category of distribution listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 7, paragraph A (1) through (5), the following information for each of the years 1958, 1959, and 1960:

(1) Year-end inventory for all products;
(2) Annual sales of all products; and
(3) Year-end inventory and annual sales for each product category listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph B (1) through (7).

D. Set forth for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960 the average length of time such products were retained in the warehouses or distribution centers maintained by the defendants during the years 1958, 1959, and 1960. Express this turnover with respect to all products and also with respect to each product category listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

E. State the number of inventory turnovers in the operations of the defendants during each year since the beginning of 1958. Express this turnover in terms of all products combined, and for each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

F. Set forth the following information for each defendant separately in 1958 and 1959, and for both defendants combined in 1960:

(1) Year-end inventory for all products as shown on the firm's balance sheet; and
(2) Year-end inventory for each product category listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7), as shown on the firm's balance sheet.

G. State whether there is any basis for the statement appearing in paragraph 5 of the amended answer set forth in this interrogatory, in addition to the material set forth in answer to paragraph A through E of this interrogatory. If so, set forth with particularity any other basis for such statement.

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 8

A-C. No records are maintained by or known to Von's which reveal the length of time or average length of time that products produced outside California are retained in warehouses or distribution centers by grocery companies, brokers, jobbers, wholesalers or wholesale cooperates doing business in the Los Angeles area. Nor does Von's know the average number of inventory turn-overs, average year-end inventory or average annual sales for each or any of said classes of firms.

D. Neither Von's nor Shopping Bag maintained or maintains records which show how long they retained products produced or manufactured outside California in their warehouses. However, it can be said that in 1958 and 1959, Von's warehoused only grocery and drug items. On an average, such items (regardless of their origin) were retained in Von's warehouse for about four weeks before being stocked on the shelves of its retail stores. Von's did not maintain records which will show the period of time during which grocery and drug items separately were retained in its warehouse.

Shopping Bag did not prepare records in 1958 and 1959 to show the average period of time during which products were retained in its warehouse, though it is believed that the average period of such retention was greater in Shopping Bag's case than in Von's. Likewise, any estimate of the period of time during which either or both companies retained merchandise in its warehouses in 1960 would be difficult and meaningless, owing principally to the fact that the merger disrupted warehousing practices and resulted in the cessation of warehousing in any warehouse for a period of about six weks. However, it is believed that during the latter part of 1960, Von's was retaining products in its warehouse for an average of about four weeks before shipping them to retail stores.

E. The following shows the number of annual inventory turn-overs in all of Von's and Shopping Bag's stores for the years 1958, 1959 and 1960 stated for all products combined and for each of the companies' divisions:

Von's Grocery Co.	1958	1959	1960*

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 10

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 9

Supply the following information as to each defendant for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960:

A. State whether any officer, official, employee, agent, broker, or any other person acting on behalf of either defendant ever traveled outside the State of California or had offices or facilities outside the State of California for the purpose of contracting for, securing, or in any other way causing the purchase or shipment of groceries and related products for resale in grocery stores operated by the defendants. If so, supply the following information as to each such person:

(1) His name;
(2) His position;
(3) The nature of his duties;
(4) The city or cities in which he purchased, or arranged for the shipment of, groceries and related products;
(5) The products involved; and
(6) Total annual retail and wholesale dollar volume of shipments of such products into California.

B. State whether any warehouse or distribution center owned and operated by either or both defendants was serviced by any railroad line. If so, supply the following information as to each such warehouse or distribution center for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960:

(1) The address of the warehouse or distribution center;
(2) The name of every railroad servicing the warehouse or distribution center;
(3) Total annual railroad shipments into the warehouse or distribution center of products originating outside the State of California, in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value, pounds, and carloads; and
(4) Total annual railroad shipments into each warehouse or distribution center of products originating outside the State of California, in each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A(1) through (7).

C. State whether either or both defendants ever received shipments by truck at any warehouse or distribution center. If so, supply the following information as to each such warehouse or distribution center for the years 1958, 1959, and 1960:

(1) The address of the warehouse or distribution center;

(2) The name of every truck line servicing the warehouse or distribution center;

(3) Total annual shipments into the warehouse or distribution center, by truck, of products originating outside the State of California; in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value, pounds, and truckloads; and

(4) Total annual shipments into the warehouse or distribution center, by truck, of products originating outside the State of California, in each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

D. State whether either or both defendants received any shipments by sea or air transportation of products originating outside the State of California in the years 1958, 1959, and 1960. If so, set forth total annual sea and total annual air shipments in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value and pounds for each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

E. State whether any products originating outside the State of California were delivered directly to the stores of either or both defendants in the years 1958, 1959, and 1960. If so, supply the following information as to such shipments:

(1) Total annual shipments in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value and pounds; and

(2) Total annual shipments in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value and pounds, for each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

F. State whether any other product not covered by any previous answer to this supplemental interrogatory and originating outside the State of California was delivered to, or received by, either or both defendants. If so, supply the following information as to such shipments:

(1) Total annual shipments in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value and pounds; and

(2) Total annual shipments in terms of retail and wholesale dollar value and pounds, for each of the product categories listed in Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6, paragraph A (1) through (7).

G. State whether any product or raw material originating outside the State of California was received by either or both defendants, to be procesed or repackaged, or otherwise used in the manufacture of a product to be sold in a grocery store. If so, supply the following information as to such shipments:

(1) The products involved;

(2) Total annual dollar purchases of each such product.

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 9

A. Norman Bolstad, Leo McManus and Edward Hirschman, all employees of Von's both before and since the merger, have made the following trips outside California for the purpose of arranging for the purchase of the following products for resale in Von's retail stores:

Buyer	Year of Trip	Place Visited	Products Purchased
Bolstad.....	1955	Phoenix, Ariz.	Grapefruit
	1955	Yakima, Wash.	Apples
	1955	Winachi, Wash.	Apples
	1955	Honolulu, Hawaii	Pineapples and Papyas
	1955	Mexicali, Mexico	Tomatoes
	1956	Hood, Oregon	Apples and Pears
	1956	Yakima, Wash.	Apples
	1956	New York, N. Y.	Cranberries
	1956	Mexicali, Mexico	Tomatoes
	1957	New York, N. Y.	Bananas
	1957	Phoenix, Ariz.	Grapefruit and Oranges

Buyer	Year of Trip	Place Visited	Products Purchased
	1957	Hood, Oregon	Apples and Pears
	1957	Yakima, Wash.	Apples
	1957	Winachi, Wash.	Apples
	1958	Phoenix, Ariz.	Grapefruit, Lettuce and Carrots
	1958	Sinaloa, Mexico	Tomatoes, Beans and Peppers
McManus.....	1957 and Each Year Thereafter	Phoenix, Ariz.	Grapefruit, Oranges and Lettuce
	1958	Southern part of Florida, including Wabasco, Plant City and Bellglade	Tomatoes, Grapefruit, Strawberries and Radishes
McManus.....	1959	Jerome, Idaho	Potatoes
	1959	Coldwell, Idao	Onions
	1959	Winachi, Wash.	Apples
Hirschman.....	1943 and About Once Every Two Years Since	Reedsport, Ore.	Cheese
	1951 and Every Year Since	Monroe, Green Bay, Plymouth and/or Mayville, Wisc.	Cheese
	1955	Copenhagen, Denmark	Cheese

Between 1955 and 1958, Norman Bolstad was the manager and head buyer of Von's produce Division. Since 1958, he has been head of Von's store operations. Since 1958, Leo McManus has been the principal buyer for Von's Produce Division. Since 1943, Edward Hirschman has been manager and head buyer of Von's Delicatessen Division.

Except as hereinabove stated, no one employed by, affiliated with, or representing Von's or Shopping Bag, has traveled outside California or had offices or facilities outside California for the purpose of contracting for, securing or causing the shipment of groceries or related products for resale in Von's or Shopping Bag's stores.

It is believed that the total annual retail and wholesale dollar volume of products whose purchase relates to the above referred to trips taken by Messrs. Bolstad, McManus and Hirschman can be obtained from a search of Von's accounting records. However, it has been agreed by and between counsel for the parties that said information will not be supplied herein, counsel for the Government reserving the right to make a further request for said information.

B. Since prior to 1958, Von's has had a distribution center at 2700 Garfield Avenue, Vernon, California, which is serviced by the Atchison, Topeka and Sante Fe Railroad.

Since prior to 1958, Shopping Bag maintained a distribution center at 10150 Lower Azusa Road, El Monte, California, which was and is serviced by the Southern Pacific Railroad. This distribution center is now operated by Von's.

Since prior to 1958, and until February, 1960, Shopping Bag maintained a distribution center at 1825 East 27th Street, Vernon, California, which was likewise serviced by the Southern Pacific Railroad.

No records maintained by either company reflect the value, tonnage or car-loads of products produced out-side of California and shipped by rail to any of the above distribution centers.

C. Both Von's and Shopping Bag had received shipments by truck at the distribution centers referred to in answer to subdivision B of this interrogatory. Hundreds of truck lines have made such shipments in the years 1958, 1959 and 1960, and principally because the supplier usually arranges and pays for trucking service, neither Von's nor Shopping Bag has records reflecting the names of said truck lines. Similarly, no records maintained by either company reflect the value, tonnage or truck-loads of products produced outside California and shipped by truck to either company at any of said distribution centers.

D. Both Von's and Shopping Bag have occasionally in 1958, 1959 and 1960, received products produced outside California and shipped to California by air or sea transportation. No records maintained by either company reflect the value or poundage of such products.

E. Both Von's and Shopping Bag have occasionally in 1958, 1959 and 1960, received products produced outside California which were delivered directly to retail stores operated by them. No records maintained by either company reflect the value or poundage of such products.

F. As is stated above, neither Von's nor Shopping Bag has records which reflect the retail or wholesale value or poundage of products produced outside California and delivered to or received by them. However, it can be stated that a substatnial quantity, if not the greater percentage of products sold by Von's and Shopping Bag in their retail stores, were and are produced outside California.

G. Prior to the merger, Shopping Bag operated a bakery which produced certain products for resale in Shopping Bag's stores. Some of the products or raw materials used in the production or processing of said bakery products originated outside the State of California. They include cake flour and certain specialty flours, all types of spices, such as cinnamon, sesame seeds, poppy seeds, lard, pecans, apples, blueberries, cherries, dates, chocolate, cocoa, stabilizers, conditioners, mold inhibitors, vitamins, enrichment tablets, flavorings, lubricants and edible oils. Since the merger, Von's has operated that bakery and has purchased similar products originating outside California for use in the production or manufacture of bakery goods.

Both prior to and since the merger, Von's has operated a Delicatessen Kitchen which manufactures, processes or repackages delicatessen products for resale in Von's stores. Some of the products so manufactured, processed or repackaged originated outside California. They include Wisconsin mild Cheddar cheese, Herkimer County cheese, Wisconsin buck, jack, Edam and grated cheese, roquefort cheese, bleu cheese, tillamook cheese and low-calorie jack cheese, bologna, summer sausage, Kosher sausage, New England sausage, liver loaf, chopped ham and olive loaf.

No records maintained by either company reflect the annual dollar purchases of such products.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 11

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von Der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, on May 4, 1960.

Q. Did you stop buying from Certified when you went into warehousing for yourself?

A. We had to go into warehousing for ourselves when we terminated our membership in Certified.

Q. Which came first, the termination or the warehousing?

A. I would say that it was a simultaneous move. We had built a warehouse and at the same time we terminated Certified.

Q. Did you determine to go into the warehousing business because you felt——

A. They both occurred in the same year, 1949.

Q. Did you determine to go into the warehousing business because you felt that you could get groceries cheaper by doing your own warehousing and purchasing directly from the supplier?

A. No, not at all. The reason we left Certified was because they could not assist us in controlling and maintaining our inventory, which was very important to us. The ultimate cost of goods to the store, whether it came out of Certified or through our warehouse, was practically the same.

Q. Is the inventory control that you refer to so important because it assures your stores of a constant source of supply?

A. It is very important. Without that we would be practically unable to operate.

Q. What are the great advantages of this inventory control that you are speaking of?

A. For one thing, when we require larger quantities of merchandise to cover an ad, we found that in many cases Certified did not have ample supply to service us. We found that in cases where there was a forthcoming price advance that Certified was not able to give us enough merchandise to afford us the same protection that the direct buying firms enjoyed. We found the same thing happened in cases of price decline, we had no floor stock protection. The control of the inventory was the big factor why we stopped doing business with Certified. (pp. 21-22).

• • • • • • •

Q. In order to maintain this inventory control and do your own warehousing was it necessary for you to operate a fleet of trucks and trailers?

A. Yes.

Q. In 1959 did you have 33 tractors and 39 trailers, approximately?

Mr. Alsup: I think, Mr. Coyle, that is the answer we gave in the answer to the interrogatory.

Mr. Coyle: I am just laying a foundation.

The Witness: I don't remember how many we had, but I would say it is approximately correct.

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. More than one truck for each store, that is, that you had in operation prior to the merger?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. But each store received deliveries every day?

A. Let me tell you the reason that we had more than one truck for each store. We also distributed produce, which required a truck per store, and then we distributed dry groceries out of the grocery warehouse. We did not send a truck per store per day with dry groceries, but we did send produce every day.

Q. One truck would go to each store?

A. At least, yes.

Q. How often would a truck deliver dry groceries to each store?

A. We had stores that received as little as two deliveries a week, and stores that got as much as four deliveries a week. (pp. 23-24)

Defendants' Answer to Plaintiff's Interrogatory No. 7B(2)
Interrogatory No. 7:

The following statement appears in paragraph 13-C of the answer filed by defendants in this action:

> ". . . there remain 38 chains of supermarkets and approximately 4,500 additional independent markets and supermarkets doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area."

With respect to this allegation supply the following information:

• • • • • • •

B. State whether the defendants' claim that each or any of the 38 chains of supermarkets and approximately 4,500 additional independent markets, referred to in the answer, compete with Von's and Shopping Bag in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. If so, supply the following information:

• • • • • • •

(2) State which of the following is included in such competition:

(a) Competition to purchase supplies and merchandise on better terms than their competitors and to secure other purchasing advantages.

(b) Competition to distribute products cheaper and to secure advantages in the distribution of products to their retail outlets.

(c) Competition to increase the sale of groceries in their stores and to secure other selling advantages over each other.

(d) Competition in advertising and promotional activities.

(e) Competition to secure new store locations.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 7:

B(2). To some extent, all of the listed factors are included in competition. Each market operator, whether independent or chain, necessarily is engaged in competition with others in the areas served by his store or stores for the good will, popular favor and patronage of consumers in such areas. Each market operator necessarily endeavors to purchase supplies and merchandise at the best possible terms and to reduce overhead, including the cost of distribution, in order that he may enjoy a profitable operation and better serve the public. All grocery concerns endeavor, through promotional activities, advertising, delivery service, extension of credit, courtesy, or other services, to increase and maintain the sale of groceries in their stores. Many, if not most, of the chains and, of course, some of the independents as well as newcomers to the business, are looking for new store locations for lease or purchase, and there is naturally some competition in trying to find such new store locations.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 5

Supply the following information with respect to each Von's and Shopping Bag Store in operation during the year 1960:

(a) The address of the store

(b) The date the store was opened or closed if it did not operate for the entire year

(c) Total dollar sales for each month during the year that the store was in operation

(d) Total dollar sales for the year by division (i.e., groceries, produce, etc.) for all Von's stores combined and for all Shopping Bag stores combined.

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 5

Exhibit K, attached hereto and by this reference made a part hereof, shows the address of each store operated by Von's and Shopping Bag during 1960, the store number assigned to each said store by Von's, and the date on which any store not in operation at the first of the year was opened.

By agreement between counsel for the parties, defendant has supplied plaintiff under separate cover a schedule showing the total net sales (i.e., gross sales less returns, customer allowances, over-rings and sales and excise taxes)[2] made in each store during each four-week period of 1960. Defendant has supplied plaintiff with such information by four-week periods rather than by months because Von's accounting system is based on said four-week periods and no monthly figures are available.

[2] Under Von's accounting system, sales and excise taxes are deducted from gross sales as of the time the goods to which such taxes relate are purchased rather than when they are sold. This accounting procedure results in such taxes being taken up in the net sales account for each store opened during the year before any sales are actually made in that store, thereby accounting for the minus net sales figures reflected in the first periods for which there is any entry with respect to stores opened during the year on the schedule supplied to plaintiff.

Total net sales by each of Von's and Shopping Bag's divisions for the year 1960 are as follows:[3]

Grocery Division	$93,255,382
Meat Division	36,994,927
Produce Division	18,001,259
Delicatessen Div.	11,949,021
Liquor Division	11,203,507
Drug Division	1,909,612
Fountain Division	662,947
Department Stores Division	3,783,353

Dated: February 9, 1961.

Johnson, Bates & Sheffield and O'Melveny & Myers, William W. Alsup, William W. Vaughn, By /s/ William W. Vaughn, Attorneys for Defendant Von's Grocery Co.

[3] By agreement between counsel for the parties, the figures supplied to plaintiff show total divisional sales for the two companies combined for the entire year.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 17

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 3

Set forth the total advertising and the total promotional expenditures made by each defendant for the years 1957, 1958 and 1959.

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 3

Expenditures for advertising by Von's and Shopping Bag for the years inquired of, as reflected by the accounting records maintained by the companies, are as follows:[1]

	Von's	Shopping Bag
1957	$808,584.79	$ 797,360.00
1958	803,350.43	1,127,497.44
1959	738,906.69	1,187,627.45

Both Von's and Shopping Bag maintained an account entitled "Promotional Expense." However, because of the indefinite meaning of the term "promotional expense," it is believed that some allowances for what might be termed promotional purposes were actually credited to the advertising expense account and in the case of Shopping Bag, some such expenses may have been credited to cost of goods sold. Subject to the foregoing comments and qualifications, the accounting records of Von's and Shopping Bag show the following amounts expended for promotional purposes during the years inquired of:

	Von s	Shopping Bag
1957	$24,523.86	$23,795.29
1958	97,632.35	41,593.50
1959	11,689.25	25,042.29

[1] Von's accounted for advertising expenses so as to reflect the net cost to Von's of cooperative advertising, as where Von's first purchased newspaper space or radio time and then sold a portion thereof to another concern. Shopping Bag's records in such situations reflect only the gross cost of advertising without any deduction for amounts received from other concerns in payment for a portion of the space or time purchased.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 4

Set forth the gross, operating and net profit or loss carried on each defendant's books for each store operated in 1957, 1958 and 1959.

Interrogatory No. 14:

By agreement between counsel for the parties, this interrogatory has been amended to read as follows:

Furnish the following information as to the advertising activities of Von's, Shopping Bag and the Combined Companies.

A. The total amount spent for advertising in 1952, 1956, 1959 and 1960 to date.

B. State which of the following advertising media were used in 1952, 1956, 1959 and 1960 to date:

(1) Radio.

(2) Television.

(3) Metropolitan newspapers distributed throughout the Los Angeles area.

(4) Community newspapers serving separate localities in the Los Angeles area.

(5) Billboards.

C. State the reasons for any change in the media used in 1952, 1956, 1959 and 1960 to date.

D. For the years 1952, 1956, 1959 and 1960 to date, show a total expenditures by each firm for each type of advertising listed in paragraph B above.

E. State the theme of advertising employed by Von's, Shopping Bag and the Combined Companies in terms of any one or a combination of the following for the period in 1952, 1956, 1959 and 1960 to date:

(1) Von's (or Shopping Bag) is the most economical place to shop.

(2) Von's (or Shopping Bag) is the most convenient place to shop.

(3) Von's (or Shopping Bag) consistently offers the best values.

(4) Von's (or Shopping Bag) offers the advantages of mass purchasing.

F. If there have been any changes in the advertising themes during the period covered by paragraph E above, state the reasons for such changes.

G. State the name of each advertising agency employed since January 1, 1950.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 14 as Amended:

A. Von's advertising expense * for the years inquired of was as follows:

Year	Amount
1952	$204,836
1956	411,389
1959	738,906
1960 (first 3 mos.)	194,949

Shopping Bag's advertising expense* for the years inquired of was as follows:

Year	Amount
1952	Information not available
1956	$616,438
1959	1,187,627
1960 (first 3 mos.)	227,021

"The Combined Companies" have expended $453,713 for advertising since the merger.

B, C and D. The records retained by Von's and Shopping Bag do not reveal the precise amounts expended for advertising through any particular media. However, it is estimated by Paul Marshall, Von's Advertising Manager, that between 80% and 85% of Von's advertising expenditures over the years have been for newspaper advertise-

* Figures for Von's were and are now kept so as to reflect the net cost to Von's of cooperative advertising, as where Von's first purchased newspaper space or radio time and then sold a portion thereof to another concern. Shopping Bag's figures reflect in such situations only the gross cost of advertising without any deduction for amounts received from other concerns in payment for a portion of the space or time purchased.

ments. Approximately one-quarter of that amount has been expended for advertisements in metropolitan papers, the remainder being the cost of advertising in community newspapers. Just prior to the merger Von's was advertising in more community newspapers than in 1952 or 1956 because Von's was doing business in 1960 in more localities than in earlier years. The more or less constant ratio of expenditures for metropolitan newspaper advertising to expenditures for advertisements in community newspapers demonstrates that there has been an increase over the years in the expense incurred by Von's for advertising in metropolitan newspapers.

The cost of radio advertising incurred by Von's has rarely exceeded 7% of its total advertising expenses. Television and billboard advertising costs have been negligible.

Frank Burke, formerly head of Shopping Bag's Advertising Department and now an employee of Von's, estimates that 90% to 95% of Shopping Bag's advertising expenditures went to purchase newspaper space. About 18% of that amount was for advertising in metropolitan papers, the remainder having been expended for advertisements in community papers. Shopping Bag has never spent more than approximately 5% of its total advertising expenditures on radio advertising. Television advertising has been negligible and billboards have not been used since 1955.

E and F. Neither Von's nor Shopping Bag has employed any of the themes referred to in subdivision E of this interrogatory, though economy and value have from time to time been inferred in the advertising employed by both companies, as in the case of the offering of "specials." Convenience has perhaps been inferred by some advertising of both companies but the advantages of mass purchasing have not been stressed, impliedly or otherwise, except in a few cases when carload or truckload sales have been advertised. Many of Von's and Shopping Bag's advertisements have emphasized quality of products and service to the public and it can perhaps be said that these factors have been the most predominate in the companies' advertising over the years.

G. Prior to and since the merger, Von's advertising agency has been Hoenig, Cooper and Harrington or its predecessors. Shopping Bag used the services of Wally McLain for placement of advertising.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 20

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 2

Set forth the total amount of money received by each defendant for the years 1957, 1958 and 1959 for the following:

A. Advertising Allowances.
B. Promotion Allowances.

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 2

Records maintained by Von's and Shopping Bag with respect to advertising and promotional allowances reflect those allowances for advertising and promotional purposes revealed on purchase orders, invoices or made the subject of written contracts. Additionally, it is believed that certain such allowances received by Shopping Bag may have been credited to the cost of goods sold rather than to any allowance account and hence are not reflected as allowances on Shopping Bag's accounting records. The preceding comments apply to the amounts of total advertising and promotional allowances afforded Von's and Shopping Bag from January 1, 1959, to March 28, 1960, and afforded to "the Combined Companies" from March 28, 1960, to June 19, 1960, as set forth in Answer to Interrogatory No. 11B contained in Defendants' Further Answers to Plaintiff's Interrogatories.

(A) Subject to the foregoing comments and qualifications, the advertising allowances received by Von's and Shopping Bag for the years inquired of as revealed by the accounting records maintained by the companies are as follows:

	Von's	Shopping Bag
1957	$278,961.81	$215,535.56
1958	265,909.12	385,295.46
1959	227,461.84	304,450.41

(B) Von's maintained no promotional allowance account. Most allowances received by Von's for what might be termed promotional purposes were credited to the advertising allowance account while other such allowances related to quantity purchases were taken up in a special income account. Shopping Bag did maintain a promotional allowance account but because of the indefinite meaning of the term "promotional allowances," it is believed that some allowances for what might be termed promotional purposes were credited to the advertising allowance account or to cost of goods sold. Subject to the foregoing comments and qualifications, Shopping Bag's accounting records show the following amounts received by way of promotional allowances for the years inquired of:

1959	20,711.44

This catalogue and service is published by MARKETING SERVICES CORP. for your use in determining how the large chain stores in your area are pricing their merchandise. It is not our purpose to encourage price cutting or low percentage mark-ups, but rather to protect our customers by keeping them informed as to the items on which the chains take a penny, as well as information as to when they take their advances deadlines on merchandise. We do not advocate the meeting of all in store prices by all merchants as each individual market has its competitive problems and must adjust its pricing policy accordingly.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 23

Admissions in Deposition of William R. Hayden, Former President of Shopping Bag Food Stores, on May 4, 1961.

* * * * * * *

Q. Subsequent to the merger have the prices in your store been adjusted so that they will be the same as the prices in the Von's Stores on identical items?

A. Well, let me say this: I think that our prices and Von's prices, Safeway, Ralphs, all of us were practically the same price before we merged, and they are the same since we merged.

Q. When you say "all of us," do you mean all the chains in the area?

A. After all, I know I can't get any more from the customer for Folger's Coffee than Von's or Ralphs or anyone else. We check prices all the time to see what is going on in the trade.

Q. It is your judgment that prior to the merger your prices were the same as Safeway and Ralphs and Von's and Market Basket, Thriftimart?

A. That's right.

Q. As Food Giant, as Alpha Beta?

A. I would say that all prices—we check one another to see what the other man is doing, and we know that we can't demand any more from the customer than the other fellow on a nationally known item. There may be items in our store that we wouldn't be to the penny the same price, whether it be a mistake in the pricing or a mistake that the store would fail to catch when they make their price changes.

Q. Are there any stores in the area which have higher prices than the Shopping Bag or the Von's Stores?

A. Generally speaking, I would say no, the only ones that I would say would be higher is some of your credit and delivery stores. We have one in the district that has higher prices, because they give the service of credit and delivery.

Q. Do the Mom and Pop's stores have the same prices as Von's and the Shopping Bag stores?

A. I would say I don't know, because I never checked one of the Mom and Pop's stores, and I don't know as any of our people ever check them. (pp. 14-15)

Q. Would Von's employ the same [pricing] practices throughout all of its stores?

A. I would say more than most companies they would follow the practice of the same price.

Q. Do you ever check anybody's advertising for the purpose of determining their policies?

A. Well, yes. We naturally read everybody's ads—that is part of our business—to keep informed on what is going on. So it's just a general routine, you might say.

Q. Does anybody save the advertising, have a folder of advertising?

A. I'm sure that our advertising department—I wouldn't say they saved all the ads from all the companies, but I am sure that they save ads from their major competitors, we'll say.

Q. What firms would they be saving ads from?

A. Well, as I mentioned earlier, we operate more or less in outlying districts, and so we would be saving ads from whoever was in that particular district.

Q. Would your advertising department save some Von's ads?

A. I would think they would, yes. (p. 14)

* * * * * * *

Q. When you set the prices you are going to charge on your products—when you did this with the old Shopping Bag—did you consider the prices charged by your competitors?

A. Yes.

Q. Which competitors did you consider, primarily?

A. Well, we would consider, again, what the majority of companies would be getting for an item. You might say, or we might have five or six different prices that we had checked and might find some to be a cent above and some might be a cent below. We might take them in between.

Q. Was there any consistent price cutter in the area?

A. Any consistent price cutter? No. I think they are all about alike.

Q. Was Food Giant, perhaps, the worst price cutter?

A. I wouldn't say so.

Q. Was Safeway?

A. No.

Q. Was Safeway one of the higher priced operations?

A. Higher priced?

Q. Yes.

A. No. I would say that more or less all of your chains are pretty much the same priced.

Q. Was Von's in line with the other chains?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you consider these chains, Safeway and Von's and Food Giant and Ralphs, when you set your prices?

A. Yes, surely. (pp. 22-23)

• • • • • • •

Q. Before the merger did you do any radio advertising?

A. No; just spot announcements from time to time.

Q. Did you do advertising in the local community papers?

A. We used the local papers, and also the Times.

Q. Was the Times the only metropolitan paper you used?

A. From time to time we have had maybe a special ad in other papers, but the Times is the one we followed for the past, oh, about eight years. (pp. 29-30)

• • • • • • •

Q. Do you advertise in other metropolitan area papers on special occasions?

A. What do you mean "other"?

Q. Other than the Times?

A. Well, yes. I answered a minute ago on special occasions we had special ads. But that is very few and far between.

Q. What kind of occasions would they be?

A. Well, about four or five years ago we ran a special opening sale in the Examiner. But we only used the Examiner, it seems to me, only one year, or less.

Q. In the last three years prior to the merger did you advertise in any metropolitan paper other than the Times?

A. We might have used the Herald evening paper for about three months. It seems to me that we did maybe in '58 or '57, just a short while.

Q. Is the Times a morning paper?

A. Morning paper, yes.

Q. Was your purpose in using the evening paper to see if you could get a better draw from it?

A. Yes. We felt there were people reading the Times, and we felt there was another group that might be reading the evening paper; so we thought we could get a different coverage. (pp. 30-31)

Interrogatory No. 13:

State whether Von's and Shopping Bag or anyone in their employ engaged in the practice of observing or analyzing the newspaper advertising of other firms during the period between January 1, 1958 and April 1, 1960. If so, supply the following information for that period as to each firm:

A. List the name of each person who observed such advertising.

B. State whether the advertising observed appeared in metropolitan newspapers or local newspapers.

C. List every chain or firm whose advertising was observed.

D. State whether a record has been maintained as to such advertising. If so, set forth the location of such record and the name of the person having custody of it.

E. State whether the advertising itself has been maintained. If so, state the location of such advertising and the name of the person having custody of it.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 13:

Yes.

A. The following named employees of Von's and Shopping Bag observed in the course of their regular duties newspaper advertising of other firms between January 1, 1958 and April 1, 1960:

Von's	Shopping Bag
H. G. Ward	George Carter
Norman Bolstad	Frank Burke
Paul Marshall	W. D.H ayden
Larry Del Santo	William Cash
Kenneth Olsen	Murray Vallance
Ed. Hirschman	E. W. Plumb
Jack Hardesty	Chas. Hughes
William Pugh	Joe Aparicio
T. A. Von der Ahe	Richard Chute
	W. R. Hayden

In addition, it can be stated that, in all probability, store managers and supervisory personnel would from time to time between January 1, 1958 and April 1, 1960, observe newspaper advertising of other firms. In that connection, see the answer to Interrogatory No 13C below.

B. The newspaper advertising observed appeared in both metropolitan and local newspapers.

C. The persons named in answer to Interrogatory No. 13A probably observed the newspaper advertising of all major chains and many smaller chains and independents doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Records are not maintained which provide a basis for supplying an accurate list of all firms whose advertising was so observed. In addition, it can be stated that, in all probability, store managers and supervisory personnel of Von's and Shopping Bag, at sometime or other between January 1, 1958 and April 1, 1960, observed newspaper advertising of all the stores in competition with each Von's or Shopping Bag store. Such competing stores will be named and their addresses given in response to Interrogatory No. 6A.

D and E. From time to time, Von's obtained some photostatic copies of such advertising from an independent source. Von's has retained some of those copies. From time to time, Shopping Bag obtained reports on competitive advertising from an independent source. Some of those reports have been retained. All such materials and reports retained are in the custody of Paul Marshall, Von's advertising department manager, at 10150 Lower Azusa Road, El Monte, California.

(Defendant has objected to Interrogatories Nos. 14 and 16. Answers to Interrogatories Nos. 15 and 17 will be filed when the information thereby called for can be developed).

VON'S GROCERY CO.

NOTES TO FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

1. Merchandise Inventories:

All inventories are priced at the lower of cost or market. The retail inventory method is applied to groceries, produce, drugs, liquor and delicatessen items in retail market locations.

Merchandise inventories entering into the computation of cost of goods sold for the three years ended January 3, 1960 were:

January 3, 1960	$5,271,426
December 28, 1958	5,856,193
December 29, 1957	5,424,512
December 30, 1956	4,913,899

2. Properties:

The company maintains detailed property records including related depreciation. Useful life by categories follows:

	In Years
Store equipment:
Refrigeration systems, cash registers, counters, scales, etc.	8 to 10
Sundry equipment	3 to 5
Automotive equipment:
Trailers	10
Tractors, trucks, and automobiles	5
Buildings	30 and 40

Leasehold improvements are written off over the life of the applicable lease.

For both financial and tax basis reporting the sum of the years-digits method was adopted in 1954 for the purpose of computing depreciation. Where such method may not be applied either the straight line method or the 150% of declining balance method is used.

Upon the disposal of depreciable property, the accounts are relieved of the related costs and accumulated depreciation. The resulting gains and losses are reflected in the income statement.

Costs of major remodeling and improvements are capitalized. Repairs and maintenance are expensed as incurred.

3. Note Payable:

The note payable dated October 15, 1959 bears interest at the rate of 5¾% per annum and is payable in monthly installments of $1,976, including principal and interest. The note is secured by a deed of trust on land and building having a net carrying value at January 3, 1960 of $484,661.

4. Leases:

At January 3, 1960, the company had under lease 28 retail store premises, general office building and certain parking lots which with respect to annual minimum rentals are summarized as follows:

	Minimum Annual Rentals
Leases with:
Affiliates	$175,300
Others	480,237
	$655,537

Three of the store leases with affiliates contain no provision for minimum rentals.

5.

The company has received proposed federal income tax deficiences for the years 1956 and 1957 which, in the opinion of management and company counsel, are without foundation.

$617,7

On January 22, 1960 the $238,500 note was subordinated to a construction loan made by a bank to Thompso Borchard Ventura Corporation.

2. Merchandise Inventories:

Merchandise inventories are valued at the lower of cost or market. Inventories entering into the computation o cost of goods sold are as follows:

January 3, 1960	$7,372,994
December 31, 1958	7,676,575
December 31, 1957	7,150,246
January 1, 1957	5,486,604

3. Properties:

The depreciation policy of the company is to provide depreciation on a straight-line method based upon th estimated life of the assets for book and statement purposes and upon an accelerated method where allowab for tax purposes. The principal rates used during the three years ended January 3, 1960 were:

	In Years
Buildings	33⅓
Furniture and fixtures	10
Automobiles and trucks	4 and 6
Leasehold improvements (estimated useful life or period of lease)

Upon disposal of depreciable property, the accounts are relieved of the related costs and accumulated depreci tion. The resulting gains and losses are reflected in the income statement.

Costs of major remodeling and improvements are capitalized. Repairs and maintenance are expensed as incurr

4. Bank Note:

The bank note dated August 9, 1957, bearing interest at 5%, and having a balance at January 3, 1960 o $1,937,500.00 is payable in quarterly installments of $62,500, aggregating $250,000 annually. The loa agreement provides, among other covenants, that the company will maintain a net worth of not less tha $7,000,000 and net current assets of not less than $5,000,000.

5. Trust Deed Notes Payable:

	Due Within One Year	Due After One Year	Total
E. M. Sloan	$ 44,575		$ 44,575
The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States	72,014	$2,135,241	2,207,255
	$116,589	$2,135,241	$2,251,830

The note payable to E. M. Sloan was assumed in connection with the acquisition of unimproved land, which is adjacent to the office and warehouse property. The note bears interest at the rate of 5% per annum payable $450.00 or more per month, including principal and interest. It is intended that the note will be paid during the ensuing year.

The note payable to The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States having a balance at January 3, 1960 of $2,207,255 is secured by a trust deed on land and office, warehouse and central bakery buildings, and is payable in quarterly installments of $43,594, aggregating $174,376 annually in the years 1959-1978, inclusive, including interest at 5¼%. The note agreement provides, among other covenants, that the company maintain net current assets of not less than $4,000,000.

4. 4½% Sinking Fund Convertible Subordinated Debentures

Of the original $1,500,000 issue, $226,000 remained outstanding at January 3, 1960. Certain provisions of the 4½% sinking fund convertible subordinated debentures due May 15, 1971 are summarized as follows:

The indenture requires the company to provide for retirement of the debentures through a sinking fund. At January 3, 1960, the company had acquired sufficient debentures through conversion to satisfy the 1959 sinking fund requirement. The debentures are convertible at their principal amount into common stock of the company at any time at $12.00 per share of common stock until May 15, 1961, $14.00 until May 15, 1966, and $16.00 thereafter until maturity. The conversion price is subject to adjustment in certain cases, and at January 3, 1960 the current conversion price was $11.54 per share. The indenture places certain restrictions on the payment of cash dividends on the stock of the company and on the purchase or redemption of its stock.

7. Deferred Income Taxes

Deferred income taxes in the amount of $127,707 are taxes to be paid in the future as the result of the company using the sum of the years-digits method of depreciation for federal income tax purposes as compared to the straight-line method of depreciation used for book and report purposes.

8. Leases

The approximate minimum annual rental liability on property and fixtures leased to the company at 38 locations is summarized by periods of expiration as follows:

	Leases	Amount
January 1, 1962 — December 31, 1966	13	$ 176,139
January 1, 1967 — December 31, 1976	19	447,101
January 1, 1977 — September 30, 1981	13	517,010
		$1,140,250

9. Commitments

The company's federal income tax returns have been examined to December 31, 1958, and all additional assessments have been paid.

10. Dividends

The common stock is entitled to cash dividends in the amount of 70 cents per share per year before any dividends may be declared or paid on Class B stock. After payment of 70 cents per share on common stock, dividends declared in any year are payable to holders of common stock and Class B stock, share and share alike. Each share of Class B stock is convertible into one share of common stock at the discretion of the holders of the Class B stock.

Restrictions on the declaration of dividends are referred to in Note 6.

Defendants' Answer to Plaintiff's Interrogatory No. 26

Interrogatory No. 26.

State whether any changes were made with respect to the stores planned to be opened by Von's and Shopping Bag between April 1, 1960 and June 1, 1960. If so, supply the following information:

A. The address of the Store or property involved.
B. The nature of the change in plans.
C. The reason for the change in plans.
D. A list of every meeting or conference referring or relating to such change in plans showing the following:

(1) Every person participating at such conference or meeting.
(2) The date of such meeting or conference.
(3) Every matter discussed at the conference.
(4) The position taken by each party present at such conference or meeting.
(5) The decision reached at the conference or meeting.

E. List all documents referring or relating to such change in plans, showing the date of the document and the location of the document.
F. State whether the property for which stores had been planned is to be used as a location for a supermarket. If so, state the name of the firm now using it.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 26.

Yes. The only change made since April 1, 1960 in the pre-merger plans of either Von's or Shopping Bag for the opening of new stores has been the decision to abandon the proposed store site at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa Avenue in Granada Hills, which was under lease to Shopping Bag prior to the merger. The decision to abandon that location was made by T. A. Von der Ahe and W. R. Hayden during a series of conferences in the first two or three weeks of May 1960. This decision was made for the following reasons; all of which were discussed by Mr. Von der Ahe and Mr. Hayden during the conferences referred to above:

(1) As of the date the merger became effective, Von's had nearly completed negotiations for the acquisition of a store site at San Fernando-Mission Road and Woodley Drive, which is almost exactly one mile from the Shopping Bag site referred to above.

(2) The Von's location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Woodley was in a newer part of Granada Hills. There were no markets of competing firms within a radius of one mile of said location, while the Shopping Bag location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa was in an older part of town and would face competition from a Ralphs market one-half mile to the South and a proposed Food Giant market one-half mile to the North.

(3) The rental obtainable on the Von's location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Woodley was more favorable than the rental obtainable on the Shopping Bag market location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa.

(4) It was felt that any market located at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa would compete to some extent with any market located at San Fernando-Mission Road and Woodley, thereby making it unwise for Von's to have markets in both locations.

There were no memoranda kept of the above referred to discussions between Mr. Von der Ahe and Mr. Hayden and the only document found in either the files of Von's or Shopping Bag which relates or refers to the decision to abandon the location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa, is a copy of a letter dated May 12, 1960 from W. H. Fisher, executive vice president of Owl Drug Co. to Mr. Lionel H. Uhlmann, Jr. A copy of that letter is located in Mr. Hayden's office at 10150 Lower Azusa Road, El Monte, California.

The lease on said location at San Fernando-Mission Road and Balboa is still in the name of Shopping Bag Food Stores. That location is part of a proposed shopping center not yet constructed. Presumably, such location will be used for a supermarket by some other concern.

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, on May 12, 1960

* * * * * * *

Q. Do you remember who made the initial suggestion, whether it was Mr. Hayden or you, that you should discuss the merger?

A. Mr. Coyle, I think I was the first one that suggested merger.

Q. Do you know when that was that you made that suggestion?

A. It's impossible for me to pin it down to a specific date, but I want to guess that it was around, oh, the latter part of 1957 or the early part of 1958.

Q. During the time between the latter part of 1957 and early part of 1958 did you have many meetings with Mr. Hayden and discuss merger with him?

A. No, there were not many meetings.

Q. After the original meeting when you first to your best recollection suggested the merger, how long a time elapsed before you then discussed the merger with Mr. Hayden?

A. We began to talk seriously about merging in the early part of 1959. (pp. 14-15)

* * * * * * *

Q. Did you make an appointment with him for the purpose of discussing it?

A. Yes. And I have to say that I am a little bit befuddled on where we met or how many times, because we did meet several times with our accountants, with our attorneys, and quite often at lunch. (pp. 15-16)

* * * * * * *

Q. What subject was discussed at these meetings between you and Mr. Hayden and your accountants?

A. Principally the basis for the exchange of stock. (p. 16)

* * * * * * *

Q. What was the basis for the exchange of stock?

A. One share of Shopping Bag for one share of Von stock. (p. 16)

Agreement of Merger

Agreement of Merger dated the 25th day of January, 1960, made and entered into by and between VON'S GROCERY Co. (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Von's") and a majority of the directors thereof, and SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES (hereinafter referred to as "Shopping Bag") and a majority of the directors thereof,

Witnesseth:

Whereas, Von's was organized pursuant to the General Corporation Law of the State of Delaware by Certificate of Incorporation filed in the office of the Secretary of State of Delaware on October 14, 1958; and

Whereas, Shopping Bag was organized pursuant to the laws of the State of California by Articles of Incorporation filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the State of California on March 7, 1933; and

Whereas, Von's has issued and outstanding 1,871,476 shares of Common Stock of the par value of $1.00 per share; and

Whereas, Shopping Bag on January 15, 1960 had issued and outstanding 342,656 shares of Common Stock of the par value of $1.00 per share (designated "Common Stock") and has issued no additional shares of such stock since said date except shares issued upon conversion of its 4½% Sinking Fund Convertible Debentures due May 15, 1971; and

Whereas, Shopping Bag on January 15, 1960 had issued and outstanding 772,584 shares of Class B Common Stock of the par value of $1.00 per share (designated "Class B Common Stock") and has issued no additional shares of such stock since said date; and

Whereas, Shopping Bag is also authorized to issue fifty thousand (50,000) shares of Preferred Stock of the par value of $25.00 per share, none of which shares at the date hereof are issued and outstanding;

Now, Therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the mutual agreements, provisions, covenants, promises and grants herein contained, the parties hereto agree, in accordance with the provisions of the General Corporation Law of the State of Delaware and the Corporations Code of the State of California that Von's and Shopping Bag shall, on the effective date of the merger hereby agreed upon (hereinafter sometimes called the "Merger"), be merged into a single corporation, to wit, Von's, one of the parties hereto (hereinafter sometimes called the "Surviving Corporation"); and that the terms and conditions of the Merger and the mode of carrying the same into effect and the manner of converting shares of Shopping Bag into shares of Von's, the outstanding shares of which are not to be changed or converted as a result of the Merger, are and shall be as hereinafter set forth.

Article I

The indentity, existence, purposes, objects, properties, franchises, powers, rights, privileges and immunities of Von's shall continue unaffected and unimpaired by the Merger; and upon the effective date of the Merger the indentity, existence, purposes, objects, properties, franchises, powers, rights, privileges, and immunities of Shopping Bag shall be merged into Von's and Von's shall be fully vested therewith.

Article II

The Certificate of Incorporation of Von's, the Surviving Corporation, as amended herein, shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed as provided therein, or as provided by law.

The first paragraph of Article Fourth of the Certificate of Incorporation of Von's, the Surviving Corporation, shall be amended as of the effective date of the Merger to read as follows:

> "Fourth. The total number of shares of stock which the corporation shall have authority to issue is five million (5,000,000) shares of Common stock and the par value of each of such shares of Common stock is One Dollar ($1.00) amounting in the aggregate to Five Million Dollars ($5,000,000.00). The holders of the Common stock shall be entitled to one vote for each share held at all meetings of the stockholders of the corporation. At all elections of directors of the corporation, each holder of Common stock of the corporation entitled to be voted thereat shall be entitled to as many votes as shall equal the number of such shares of stock of such holder multiplied by the number of directors to be elected, and each such stockholder may cast all of such votes for a single director or may distribute them among the total number of directors to be voted for, or among any two or more of such directors, as such stockholder may see fit."

Article III

The By-Laws of Von's, the Surviving Corporation, as in effect on the effective date of the Merger, shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed as provided therein, or as provided by law.

Article IV

The names of the directors and principal officers of the Surviving Corporation who, subject to the provisions of the By-Laws of the Surviving Corporation and the laws of the State of Delaware, shall hold office until the first annual meeting of the stockholders of the Surviving Corporation held subsequent to the effective date of the Merger and the election or appointment of their respective successors are as follows:

Directors

James E. Bates
Edward C. Freutel, Jr.
W. D. Hayden
W. R. Hayden
Victor Hinson
Ernest J. Loebbecke
Charles L. Morse, Jr.
Charles T. Von der Ahe
Theodore A. Von der Ahe
Walter R. Von der Ahe
Wilfred A. Von der Ahe

Principal Officers

Charles T. Von der Ahe	Chairman of the Board
Theodore A. Von der Ahe	President
W. R. Hayden	Senior Vice President
Wilfred L. Von der Ahe	Executive Vice President
Victor Hinson	Secretary
James C. Ball	Treasurer
Edward C. Freutel, Jr.	Assistant Secretary and Assistant Treasurer

If, on the effective date of the Merger, a vacancy shall exist in the Board of Directors of the Surviving Corporation, such vacancy may be filled in the manner provided in the By-Laws of the Surviving Corporation.

Article V

The shares of Von's outstanding on the effective date of the Merger (including any shares held in the Treasury of Von's) shall not be converted as a result of the Merger, and shall remain outstanding as shares of the Surviving Corporation.

The manner of converting the shares of Shopping Bag into shares of the Surviving Corporation shall be as follows:

Forthwith upon the effective date of the Merger the shares of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag then outstanding (other than shares of such Common Stock and Class B Common Stock held by Shopping Bag in its Treasury, if any) shall be converted into shares of Common Stock of the Surviving Corporation upon the basis of one (1) share of Common Stock of the Surviving Corporation for each share of Common Stock of Shopping Bag and one (1) share of Common Stock of the Surviving Corporation for each share of Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag.

All shares of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag held by it in its Treasury on the effective date of the Merger shall be surrendered to the Surviving Corporation for cancellation, and no shares of the Surviving Corporation shall be issued or issuable in respect thereof.

All shares of Common Stock of the Surviving Corporation issued to holders of shares of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag shall be issued in full satisfaction of all rights pertaining to such shares of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag.

Article VI

Upon the effective date of the Merger, the separate existence of Shopping Bag which is merged into and with Von's pursuant to this Agreement of Merger shall cease, and in accordance with this Agreement of Merger the Surviving Corporation shall possess all of the rights, privileges, powers and franchises as well of a public as of a private nature, and be subject to all the restrictions, disabilities and duties of Shopping Bag, and all and singular the rights, privileges, powers and franchises of Shopping Bag, and all property of Shopping Bag, real, personal and mixed, and all debts due to Shopping Bag on whatever account, or belonging to Shopping Bag shall be vested in the Surviving Corporation; and all property, rights, privileges, powers and franchises, and all and every other interest shall be thereafter as effectually the property of the Surviving Corporation as they were of Shopping Bag; provided, that all rights of creditors and all liens upon the property of Shopping Bag shall be preserved unimpaired, limited in lien to the property affected by such liens at the effective date of the Merger, and all debts, liabilities and duties of Shopping Bag shall thenceforth attach to the Surviving Corporation, and may be enforced against it to the same extent as if said debts, liabilities and duties had been incurred or contracted by the Surviving Corporation. If at any time the Surviving Corporation shall deem or be advised that any further assignments, assurances in law or other acts or instruments are necessary or desirable to vest or confirm in the Surviving Corporation the title to any property of Shopping Bag, Shopping Bag and its proper officers and directors shall and will do all such acts and things as may be necessary or proper to vest or confirm title to such property in the Surviving Corporation and otherwise to carry out the purposes of this Agreement of Merger.

The Surviving Corporation shall pay all expenses of the Merger. It is expressly provided, however, that in the event this Agreement of Merger is terminated or abandoned in any manner for any reason, each corporation shall pay all expenses incurred by it as of the date of such termination or abandonment.

Article VII

Until the effective date of the Merger or termination or abandonment of this Agreement of Merger, neither corporation shall, without the consent of the other:

(1) Pay any dividend or make any distribution on any of its shares of stock, except that Shopping Bag may continue to pay regular quarterly dividends on its Common Stock at a quarterly rate not exceeding fifteen cents (15¢) per share and Von's may continue to pay regular quarterly dividends on its Common Stock at a quarterly rate not exceeding ten cents (10¢) per share.

(2) Issue any shares of its stock of any class except that Shopping Bag may issue shares of its Common Stock upon conversion of its 4½% Sinking Fund Convertible Subordinated Debentures due May 15, 1971 outstanding at the date of this Agreement of Merger and upon conversion of its Class B Common Stock outstanding at the date of this Agreement of Merger.

(3) Issue any options for the purchase of any shares of its stock of any class.

Article VIII

This Agreement of Merger shall be submitted to the stockholders of Shopping Bag and Von's as provided by the applicable laws of the States of California and Delaware, at meetings which shall be held on or before March 17, 1960, or on such later date as the Boards of Directors of Shopping Bag and Von's shall mutually approve. After the approval and adoption thereof by the holders of not less than two-thirds of the outstanding shares of Common Stock of Von's and by the holders of not less than two-thirds of the outstanding shares of Common Stock and not less than two-thirds of the outstanding shares of Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag, this Agreement of Merger shall be filed and recorded in the manner required by the General Corporation Law of the State of Delaware and filed in the office of the Secretary of State of California in the manner required by the Corporations Code of the State of California, unless terminated as provided in Article IX of this Agreement of Merger. The Merger shall become effective upon such filing and recording.

Article IX

This agreement of Merger may be terminated and the Merger may be abandoned at any time prior to the effective date of the Merger by mutual consent of the Boards of Directors of the respective corporations. In addition, this Agreement of Merger may be terminated and abandoned at any time prior to the effective date of the Merger by action of the Board of Directors of either Von's or Shopping Bag in the event that any one or more of the following shall occur:

(a) All necessary permits or approvals of governmental agencies having jurisdiction with respect to the Merger shall not have been obtained within six months after the date hereof;

(b) Shopping Bag shall not, within six months after the date hereof, have obtained a favorable ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that the exchange of shares of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag for shares of Common Stock of Von's in accordance with the terms and provisions of this Agreement of Merger, will be a non-taxable transaction to the shareholders of Shopping Bag under the provisions of Section 354 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954;

(c) Either corporation shall be enjoined by a court from holding a meeting of its stockholders to consider and vote upon this Agreement of Merger or from taking any other action necessary to consummate the Merger;

(d) Either corporation shall fail to obtain, within six months after the date hereof, at a meeting of its stockholders the approval and adoption of this Agreement of Merger by the vote of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the outstanding shares of its stock of each class;

(e) Claims of stockholders of Von's and Shopping

Bag who dissent from the Merger amount in the aggregate to a sum in excess of $1,000,000; or

(f) In the reasonable opinion of the Board of Directors of either corporation any material adverse change shall have occurred in the properties, assets or business of Von's or Shopping Bag.

In addition this Agreement of Merger may be terminated and abandoned at any time prior to the effective date of the Merger by action of the Board of Directors of Von's in the event that on or prior to March 20, 1960 any stockholder of Shopping Bag reasonably deemed by Von's to be a controlling stockholder or a member of any controlling group or groups of stockholders of Shopping Bag shall have failed or refused to deliver to Von's a statement in form satisfactory to Von's to the effect that it is his intention to acquire shares of Common Stock of Von's upon the Merger for investment and not with a view to the distribution or resale of any thereof.

In the event of termination of this Agreement of Merger as herein provided, this Agreement of Merger shall become wholly void and of no effect and there shall be no liability to any stockholder or other person or to any corporation or to the respective parties hereto on the part of either Von's or Shopping Bag or their respective Boards of Directors or stockholders.

Article X

Pursuant to the terms and conditions of a Negotiating Permit dated October 20, 1959 granted by the Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California, the parties hereto expressly agree that Von's shall not be liable for failure to issue any securities pursuant to this Agreement of Merger unless and until a further permit authorizing the sale and issuance of such securities has first been granted by said Commissioner of Corporations. Said permit dated October 20, 1959 further requires the following legend be included herein:

"The Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California has made no finding or determination in relation to the fairness of the negotiation or agreements hereby permitted and this negotiating permit is permissive only and does not constitute a recommendation or endorsement of the securities permitted to be offered and should not be understood as an indication that such finding or determination of fairness will be made or that a definitive permit authorizing sale or issuance of securities, if applied for, will be granted."

In Witness Whereof, Von's and Shopping Bag have caused this Agreement of Merger to be signed in their respective corporate names by the President or a Vice President and have caused their respective corporate seals to be hereunto affixed and attested by the Secretary or an Assistant Secretary, and a majority of the directors of Von's and Shopping Bag, respectively, have hereunto set their hands, all as of the day and year first above written.

Gross Percentages (via Stores)

	Von's	Shopping Bag
Grocery and Drug	16.69	17.57	(NOTE A)
Meat	23.74	21.22	(NOTE B)
Produce	29.12	28.70	(NOTE C)
Delicatessen	29.93	31.35	(NOTE D)
Liquor	26.36	27.12	(NOTE E)
Dept. Store	—	29.56	(NOTE F)
Fountain	51.86	38.25
Total	21.27	21.82

Note A—Grocery Depts. have not been charged any warehouse handling charge. Assuming 55% of total grocery and drug purchases are shipped out of the warehouse this would mean a minimum charge of $670,000.00 to the grocery depts. which would lower the gross profit to 15.98. On a comparalbe basis with Von's, this percentage would be further reduced by retaining credits for swell allowances, special and quantity purchase discounts that Shopping Bag has passed-on to the stores through lower cost pricing.

Recapturing the above warehouse charges and maintaining Von's gross of 16.69 would mean a pick-up of $969,500 in overall gross profit to the company from the grocery and drug depts. alone using 1959 grosses. Current grosses are higher and will produce additional income to both companies.

Transfer of frozen foods from produce to the grocery division of Shopping Bag will produce both additional sales and profit. The addition of beer and wine to the grocery depts., all of which was formerly sold in the liquor division alone, will produce added sales and profits.

Note B—On the basis of the above 1959 grosses in the meat division, a pick-up of 2.52% in gross to bring Shopping Bag to the level of Von's would produce an additional profit of $381,000 from this division.

Percentages of various departmental sales to total sales indicate that the meat division in Shopping Bag is not getting their share of the consumer's dollar. On a comparable basis with Von's in 1959, this division should have enjoyed an additional $5,000,000 in sales which would and should be expected to produce an added $1,185,000 in gross profit.

Note C—Shopping Bags produce division has carried all frozen foods with the exception of frozen meats normally carried in the Meat Depts. No attempt has been made to determine the exact amount of frozen food sales, however using the industry-wide percentage of 5% of grocery sales as a yardstick, this would reduce total sales in the produce division for comparative purposes with Von's by $2,300,000 thereby adjusting total sales to $7,922,000 of fresh produce.

Shopping Bag retained $1,053,000 of produce gross in the warehouse although this amount has been included in arriving at the 28.70 percent. Adding back $450,000 that Von's retained thru handling charges and misc. income would revise Von's overall produce gross to 34.06 or 5.36% over that of Shopping Bag.

Applying the 5.36% additional gross profit to the adjusted sales of fresh produce ($7,922,000) as explained above would produce an additional gross profit of $424,600. This does not provide for any increase in produce volume which would still be $2,000,000 behind Von's on a current basis. A pick-up of this volume alone would produce $680,000 in added gross.

Note D—These percentages again are not comparable because of the additional markup that Von's has taken in the Delicatessen Kitchen to offset Kitchen operating costs. Amounting to $250,000, this figure when added back to store grosses would produce a new gross profit percentage of 33.46 or 3.11% higher than that of Shopping Bag. Recapture of this markup on their current volume would produce an additional $135,000 in gross profit.

From a comparative standpoint, the Deli. division is $2,000,000 behind in sales. Bringing this division up to the level of Von's operation would produce an additional $582,000 in gross profit. Reduction in operating costs can be expected through combining the Deli. Kitchen operations.

Note E—Shopping Bag appears to have done an excellent job in their Liquor Division. In comparing total sales of this division for both companies, several factors must be taken into consideration as follows:

1—Von's operated approximately 17⅓ Liquor Depts. during 1959 as compared to 38 for Shopping Bag.
2—On an average sales per store basis, Shopping Bag does $800 per week per store more volume. This volume has included all beer and wine sales, sales of magazines, newspapers, photo developing, cigars and other types of sundry merchandise (Xmas lights, decorations, etc.) that would be carried in Von's outside drug depts.
3—Gross profit is in line but not excessive when it is considered that no charge is made to this division for warehousing costs or trucking expense.

Note F—Inventories in this division as of the end of the year totaled $1,176,000 which represented a considerable reduction over average monthly inventory. Using this reduced inventory as a basis however, on $3,030,000 costs of sales, this division has turned-over its inventory a maximum of 2½ times in the year 1959.

If this division was to bear the costs of warehousing its own merchandise including buying dept. costs, trucking and its proportionate share of advertising, administrative and store operating costs, it would be impossible for it to operate at a profit. As it now stands, the department store division could increase the profits of the company considerably were it to cease operations and liquidate inventories.

Summary

By making the necessary changes in the gross profit structure of the various divisions and instituting warehousing handling charges, both of which can be accomplished immediately, the following increase in gross profit should be realized:

Grocery & Drug	969,500
Meat	381,000
Produce	424,600
Delicatessen	135,000
Total	$1,910,100

The above projection does not provide for any increase in either sales or gross profits as the figures are based on 1959 sales and grosses only. We can expect a minimum $10,000,000 increase in sales because of the 4 week strike. The year 1960 provides for further additional gross thru reduced markdowns.

Minutes of Meeting—January 5, 1960

Those present were: Mr. T. A. Von der Ahe, Mr. W. L. Von der Ahe, and Mr. W. R. Hayden, comprising the Executive Committee and Messrs. Ball, Bolstead, Bushmeyer, Carter, Doyle, Harvey, Del Hayden, Hinson, Hirschman, Marshall, Olsen, Osberg, Plumb, Van Ness, Ward and Walter Von der Ahe.

The meeting was opened by Mr. W. R. Hayden with 30 seconds of silent prayer. Mr. Hayden welcomed those present, touched briefly on the purpose of the meeting, and turned the meeting over to Mr. T. A. Von der Ahe.

Mr. Von der Ahe stated that the group of Division Heads present at the meeting will constitute the Management Committee of the newly merged organization and appointed Mr. Del Hayden as Chairman pro-tem of that Committee.

He named Mr. Walter Von der Ahe and Mr. Del Hayden as a special committee to be in charge of liaison, coordination, and expediting of programs.

Mr. Von der Ahe pointed out the advisability of weekly letters to personnel of both Companies to explain the progress of the program and suggested a special edition of the house magazine to be available immediately after March 28. He suggested plans be considered for a dinner meeting of Department Heads and wives, and Mr. Will Von der Ahe suggested Del and Walter should coordinate this program. Will also expressed the opinion that some larger meetings should be held that will cross organization lines. It was suggested that new Division Heads attend weekly meetings of Supervisors. It was further suggested that Ken Doyle and Charles Harvey plan to visit all stores together in the near future.

Mr. Bolstead suggested that the Divisional Managers not only sit in meetings of Supervisors, but in meetings of Buyers and others, pointing out that we are entering a learning period during which changes in procedure must be planned.

It was announced that the Von's Produce Dock will begin to serve Shopping Bag Stores on February 1.

Mr. Olsen asked how many Supervisor districts were planned and Mr. Von der Ahe suggested that Del and Walter, together with George Carter and two or three others, should meet and decide; one of the first things necessary being the realigning of Supervisors' districts. While no immediate changes will be made, it is time to start planning for the future. A general discussion established the agreement that, where possible, Supervisors' districts should not cross lines, although some exceptions will be necessary. For instance, Liquor Supervisors and some others can handle more stores than will be represented by one district. Mr. Von der Ahe said to get back to the major point—Division Heads should get together on personnel in their division and know their people in both Companies.

Mr. Bolstead asked if the Management Committee should meet on a regularly scheduled basis or will Del Hayden, as Chairman, call those meetings. Mr. Von der Ahe replied that Buz should continue his Von's meetings; that different segments should meet and that the Division Heads should get to know their people and their locations.

Mr. Von der Ahe asked how we might best integrate the produce operation using Von's facilities. Mr. Osberg explained the program which has been worked out whereby the Buyers will buy for all stores. Orders will be filled at Von's Produce Dock and Shopping Bag trucks will deliver to the Shopping Bag Stores. He stated it is no problem so far as personnel is concerned, using both Von's and Shopping Bag Order Clerks and using Von's forms. He suggested that perhaps in the soft fruit season problems might develop.

Mr. Will Von der Ahe pointed out the importance of terminating non-essential personnel and Mr. Osberg replied it is possible that they might be one man over at present. Shopping Bag will continue to write its Produce ads and Del Hayden suggested that both Companies better not go on the same item at the same time.

Mr. Von der Ahe inquired about the re-numbering of stores, and Mr. Ball replied that this should be held off for the present.

Mr. Bushmeyer initiated a general discussion regarding the handling of crates and it was recommended that crates be operated out of one yard with no charge and no credit. Any profit accrued during the 8 weeks in question could be split.

Mr. Osberg asked if the two ice machines belonged to Shopping Bag and if so, should they be moved; the answer to both questions being in the affirmative.

Mr. Von der Ahe reiterated the importance of Division Heads getting to know their men. Any plan to revamp personnel set-up should be approved by the Executive Committee.

The question of store signs was discussed. Mr. Marshall stated he and Frank Burke had explored the requirements and effective February 1, Von's Sign Shop will supply all stores. He stated these signs will be distributed by the Produce trucks and that no major problems were expected to develop.

There was a long and general discussion concerning the Deli Kitchen operation, including the present problems and the plans for the future. Plans for a new label were discussed. Mr. Carter pointed out that the brand name of "Perfection" can not be used on all products. There was general agreement that a label featuring "Von's Shopping Bag" might best serve for all Company products. In the meantime, it was decided there is no reason why Shopping Bag labels may not appear in Von's Stores and Von's labels in Shopping Bag Stores. Mr. Ball suggested that this be checked with the attorneys. Mr. Olsen volunteered that he presently has some fine drawings of suggested "Von's Shopping Bag" labels and also a combination of "Table King" and "Harvest King" for turkeys.

Mr. Von der Ahe suggested that Mr. Hirschman submit samples of Von's salads to Mr. Carter and others, with the idea that these fine products may be available to Shopping Bag without delay.

Mr. Von der Ahe asked Myron Van Nese concerning plans for supplying certain Von's Stores with bread and rolls. Van replied that it required very little to be ready to service a limited number of stores. He recommended that six or eight items be selected to be supplied to not more than ten stores as a beginner, and that stores be added and items added as experience would indicate. He stated that it takes about six weeks to make changes in bakery labels. Van Ness explained the functions of a "Bakery Girl" in Shopping Bag Stores, stating that in a store doing from $2500 to $2800 volume on our own bakery products it requires almost the full time of a well trained person if the stores continue to package pies, cakes, et cetera.

Mr. Bolstead suggested that the promotion of bread should precede delivery. After general discussion, Mr. Von der Ahe appointed Bud Ward, George Carter, Jack Hardesty and Myron Van Ness as a committee to come up with a workable plan to initiate delivery of Shopping Bag Bakery products to the Von's group. He asked Bud to serve as Chairman of this committee.

Mr. Von der Ahe asked all Division Heads to furnish him with a complete list of items that might be discontinued as a result of the merger, asking that Companies and brands be named and approximate volume estimated. He asked that this apply not only to items discontinued but also to items where volume might be substantially reduced. He asked everyone to make the best possible guess.

There was some discussion of buying methods of liquor and Ernie Plumb was asked to submit a study covering this question.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 60

Minutes of Executive Committee Meeting
Von's Grocery Co.

Tuesday and Wednesday, March 8-9, 1960

Committee Members present:

T. A. Von der Ahe
W. R. Hayden
W. L. Von der Ahe

Also Present:

Harold G. Ward
Norman Bolstad

1. The general subject of developing a company personality was discussed and it was the consensus of opinion that great emphasis should be placed on the merchandising of perishable products, listed in order of importance—

Meats
Produce
Delicatessen
Bakery

It was agreed that it would be difficult to effectively merchandise staple groceries to sustain continued patronage, whereas, on the other hand a vigorous effort put behind the sale and display of highest quality perishable products would be inducive to, not only holding volume, but increasing it.

2. There followed interviews with the respective Division Heads and members of the Management Committee to discuss their ideas of organization.

no

The first man to appear was JIM BALL, who recommended that Elmer Larsen be given a promotion and that he, Ball, would undertake to prepare and watch Budgets, consult with Larsen and take care of the other duties associated with the officership of Treasurer. Ball further suggested that Jim Burson be next in line to E. Larsen and that Lightley, who was currently the manager of the office at S.B. could be relocated through the efforts of Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery.

Ball further recommended Harold Sieps to head up the I.B.M. Department and named Norman Reed as his assistant.

The question of timing the consolidating of Facilities was next discussed and it was agreed as follows:

Monday, August 15th, being the first day of the Ninth Period was set aside for the combining of both Grocery Warehouse Departments into the plant at El Monte, with service to all stores to commence out of said plant as of that date. This date was selected because it was felt that it would be physically impossible to effectively carry out the consolidating of warehousing any earlier.

Monday, July 18th., the first day of the Eighth Period was set aside for the combining of all office functions and facilities, such as the Buying, Personnel, Tabulating, Accounting etc. into the offices of S.B. and vacating the present offices of Von's at that time.

It was also decided that the Operational Departments of both companies should be combined as soon as possible with headquarters in El Monte. By this is meant that the Division Heads, their Supervisors, what Buyers and Accounting could be moved, should begin to operate out of El Monte as early as possible after the effective date of the merger.

The Auditing Department is preparing separate reports for the two companies through the first three periods and the fourth period beginning March 28th. will be the first showing the combined operating reports and statements.

It was brought out at this time that there will be a great deal of work required to merge the two companies and in this regard it was emphasized and repeated that all persons on the Organizational Chart should follow the lines of authority and responsibility so as to eliminate running at cross purposes, or one executive or administrative head attempting to solve problems and situations which should properly belong to another person. In other words, it was decided that the person responsible for operating a certain Division or Department should be the one to whom all questions and problems relating to the operation of the department should be referred.

H. Ward was then interviewed and repeated that the function of his department was—

(1) To maintain the customer count and sales in dollars and cents.
(2) Increase the customer count and sales in dollars and cents.
(3) Preserve the gross margin and profits, both in percentages and dollars.

Ward further stated that he anticipated a Net of $3,500,000.00 or $1.18 per share which, coincidentally, was also 2.0% Net Profit after Taxes on sales of $183,000,000.00 without including new additions.

Ward further stated that his preliminary survey indicated that the Sales Percentage per department would be broken down as follows:

Grocery	51.6
Meat	23.6
Produce	11.7
Delicatessen	7.2
Liquor	3.3
Drug	2.0
Fountain	.5
Total	100 %

Ward further concluded that the Gross Profit in the respective departments should be as follows:

Grocery	18.0 %
Meat	24.75%
Produce	31.0%
Delicatessen	31.0%
Liquor	25.0%
Fountain	52.0%

It was decided at this point that there would be one Buyer named to procure all supplies of any nature for any Department. This included items such as Paper Goods, Cellophane, Wrappers, Lamps, Packaging Supplies, or whatever it might be, all to be channeled through one Buyer.

N. H. Bolstad was next interviewed and the subject of one man for each twenty stores acting as an Overall District Manager was discussed without reaching a conclusion.

The question of Meetings was also brought up and it was finally decided that both Ward and Bolstad would conduct meetings as follows:

Division Heads—Every Monday afternoon
Supervisors —Once a month

It was also determined that the Division Heads would meet with their own respective Supervisors each Tuesday morning.

Victor Hinson, Secretary of the merged Company and manager of the insurance department stated that he intends to operate his department by installing a system of preventive measures to eliminate hazardous conditions, also that his department will take care of all customer claims and all calls regarding same, and that they will also provide us with statistical information concerning all claims and losses. The paper work would probably remain in the personnel department with Bob Carney continuing to produce the figures and also Hinson would be expected to overlook the insurance provided for personnel, particularly the Health & Welfare through the Unions and also the Health and Welfare for non-Union employees in addition to Workmen's Compensation Unemployment Insurance claims etc.

It was also suggested that Hinson in his capacity as Secretary discharge all of the duties of a Secretary, and one of the first tasks to be assigned to him would be to synopsize all leases in a form readily understandable by management, and this would mean that each market location should be treated separately showing a plot plan, dimensions, terms of the lease, taxes and all pertinent data including a photo of the store.

Geo. Carter, Manager of the Grocery Division, presented an organizational chart breaking the Buying functions into three separate categories, each of which is to be headed by Don Stuetz, Sam Hebley and Nick Alex.

There was discussion to the effect that we should retain Cliff. Koons as an interviewer for the time being in order to take the pressure off of the Buyers who could conceivably be very busy for the next few months.

Nick Alex was also nominated as the person in charge of buying all Supplies for all divisions.

Kenneth Olsen, Manager of the Meat Division, also presented his organizational study which was accepted by the Committee. He also presented Sales and Expenses for the combined operation for the current year and predicted a Net Profit of approximately $967,500.00 which was based on 2.25% of sales which he anticipated at $43,000,000.00. Olsen also presented a recap of supervisory costs and suggested a few salary adjustments to bring the S.B. personnel up to the Von's level.

Edward Hirschman also presented his recommendations for supervisorial districts and requested permission to break out the districts into the number of five.

Von's supervisor—Kenny Smith—was to be give 19 stores
Bill Hamilton —17 Stores
Harold Smith —10 Stores
Leonard Welch—10 Stores and the other district was given to a new Von's Supervisor —Ted Alamshah formerly of No. 24.

Ernie Plumb, Manager of the Non-Foods Division, which included Drugs, Department Stores, Liquor, Fountain, presented a very thorough study of the conditions as they now exist and offered appropriate suggestions for future operations. Along this line it was agreed that each of the respective departments, such as those above-named were to be under the management of a manager who would be directly responsible to Ernie Plumb. The managers were named as follows:

Drug and Department Store —Dick Chute, Manager
Buyers to be—Dick Hougham—Soft Goods
Gil. Torrance —Housewares and Hardware
Art Plumb —Drugs & Sundries
Supervisors to be—Charles Thompson, Jack Wilson, Robert Hearns, Don Steed, Bill Lousen.

The Liquor Division is to be headed up by Stoddard Johnston with Harvey Ruf, Buyer, and Supervisors Ray Adams, Virgil Goshorn and Bud Moorman. In this connection it was decided that the Liquor Buyer would be the only person to buy all Beers, Wines, Liquors regardless of where they were eventually to be sold.

Jack Smith was named to head the Snack Bar operation.

No further discussion was held as to other executive or administrative personnel in the Snack Bar department.

It was decided to supply all stores with Liquor from the Shopping Bag Warehouse as soon after March 28th. as possible.

Paul Marshall, Advertising Manager, also submitted his ideas for the organization of his department, which was accepted with the one exception that Chuck Hughes was to be given a different title other than "Assistant Advertising Manager."

Don Bushmeyer will be the manager of both Distribution Centers which includes the Warehousing, the Traffic Garage Maintenance, Crate Yards etc. and was instructed to immediately lay out plans for the installation of a towveyor in the S.B. Warehouse.

There was discussion that Jim Ball should be contacted to determine how quickly we can adopt a uniform code system, and it was emphasized in capital letters that the four digit code was not enough to handle our requirements because it created problems both on the assembly line and in the Buying Department and that it must be expanded to a five digit code.

Jim Ball has some definite ideas on why we should retain the four digit code, but it appears that it does create operating problems and a compromise must be reached very soon.

At the present time we use the same code number for deal pack as for regular pack merchandise and all operating men were in agreement that two different code numbers should be used.

Kenneth Doyle, Manager of the Personnel Department, presented a very scholarly treatise on the effective utilization of human resources, but was prevented from going into it at any length because of the shortness of time. There were many questions brought up during the discussion which necessarily were postponed and we promised to give him answers in the future when we could have a meeting with him. His suggestions for an organizational chart were accepted, especially in view of the fact that he promised the committee a savings of at least $700.00 per week or $35,000.00 per year in the administration of the Personnel Department.

Rudy Weber, Manager of the Security Department likewise presented his structural chart, showing that he would now be responsible for the security of 4200 employees and the recommendation and request of Mr. Weber was accepted and approved.

Minutes Of Executive Committee Meeting
Von's Grocery Co.

March 29, 1960

1. Liquor Licenses were to be transferred, which is now in actual process. The fee is $140.00 per license.
2. Victor Hinson was asked to analyze all leases in both the Von's and Shopping Bag names and to prepare a short synopsis of each lease for the executive Committee. Further, Mr. Hinson was requested to see that all terms, conditions and covenants of the respective leases are being complied with, both by the company and the Lessor. This applies particularly to parking lot agreements, waivers of rights of subordination etc.

It was also agreed that those leases in the name of Shopping Bag properties which provided for a one and one half percent excess rental should be modified to conform with the one and one fourth percentage rental in the Von's Property leases.

Mr. Hinson was also requested to coordinate the entire insurance program for the company, and in this connection it was suggested that he confer with Mr. John Tracy of Cass & Johansing to develop the best insurance program.

All claims for Public Liability and Property Damage are to be referred directly to Mr. Hinson. Miss Kathleen Saxelby has been taking care of these claims for the Von's group and is requested to consult with Mr. Hinson when she turns her files over to him so that he will have a working knowledge of the status of the claims at Von's.

The claims under Workmen's Compensation shall continue to be handled through the Personnel Departments, however, under the jurisdiction of Mr. Hinson. This is in order that he shall be in complete charge of the entire insurance program.

There was a discussion on the executive term excess insurance and it was decided that Mr. Hinson should request the broker to keep the insurance in effect exactly as it is now until such time as a new organizational chart will be developed and the insurance program modified to conform to the new chart.

Vic Hinson was also requested to "cash in" a life insurance policy on the life of Mr. W. R. Hayden which had a cash value of $57,270.00.

All other items pertaining to insurance such as the requirement for notices, or assignment or whatever were delegated to Mr. Hinson for execution.

2. Mr. James Ball was requested to set up a system of operating procedures and was asked to supply the operating personnel with as much statistical data as possible in order that they may have all the information they need. This included such statistics as Sales—Current against a year ago, and although it was explained that a year ago Gross Profits and other operating figures for the Shopping Bag Stores is not available, we would like to have whatever checkpoints we can find in order to establish progress reporting.

Mr. Ball was also instructed to prepare a cash flow budget with the idea in mind of indicating what needs, if any, the company will have for additional funds.

It was decided that we should draw down as much of the deposit with Certified Grocers as possible. The deposit at the present time is $95,858.13.

3. It was decided that the convertible debentures be allowed to ride until approximately this time next year at which time they are due and callable.

4. It was decided to expedite the consolidating of the warehouses, particularly the Grocery Warehouse as soon as possible and it was thought that perhaps this could be accomplished by June 15th.

5. Mr. Ball also agreed to handle the setting up of a new system for abbreviations to be used in the I.B.M. Department. It was suggested that a Standard Dictionary of Abbreviated Terms be employed so that the same words would be abbreviated each time and still adequately convey the descriptions.

6. T. A. Von der Ahe agreed to contact the Security First National Bank home office at 6th. & Spring and renew the present indebtedness, but eliminating the loan agreement which could possibly contain some provisions that would be unacceptable to us.

7. The question of authorized signatures on bank cards was discussed and it was determined that for inter-branch banking, transferring funds from one branch to the headquarters account, there would be one signature of either the President, Senior Vice President, Executive Vice President or Treasurer. And for withdrawal from the home office account at either the Bank of America or Security First National Bank that any two signatures of the above men would be required and the name of the Chairman of the Board was included in this latter category.

8. The weekly reports were discussed and it was decided to request from James Ball reports on the following:

1. Sales
2. Payroll
3. Markups and markdowns
4. Inventories and those other reports that usually are given to the Supervisors.

9. It was brought out that the Blue Chip Stamp Company has issued 60 Shares of Class "A" Stock which is the controlling stock of the company, and said stock is held as follows:

Safeway	—6 Shares
Purity	—6 Shares
Lucky	—6 Shares
Thrifty Drug	—6 Shares
Alexander	—6 Shares
Thriftimart	—6 Shares
Ralph's	—6 Shares
Market Basket	—6 Shares
Shopping Bag	—6 Shares
Von's	—6 Shares
	60 Shares

The Shares cost $100.00 per Share and George Carter is the Director for the Shopping Bag Food Stores and Jim Ball is the Director on the Board for Von's Markets.

The Class "B" Stock is issued on a basis of one share per store up to 45 stores. There will be a Board meeting of Blue Chips on April 29th. to decide whether Von's will be compelled to divest itself of the Shopping Bag Shares of both the "A" and "B" which they now own—33 Shares in Shopping Bag's name and 22 Shares in Von's name.

10. The subject of attempting to decide at this time the future location of the Distribution Plant was discussed without reaching any conclusion. A more thorough study of the advantages and disadvantages of both of the present plants should be undertaken and also the possibility of building an entirely new facility and disposing of the two plants should not be dismissed.

11. It was the consensus of the Committee to continue with negotiations for the lease on the Von's Grenada Hills site, being the northwest corner of San Fernando Mission Road and Woodley.

Mr. W. R. Hayden was requested to contact several other competing grocery firms to effect a trade of the San Fernando Mission-Balboa site.

He also mentioned that he might be able to make some kind of a deal for the Shopping Bag Garden Grove store.

12. Mr. Tom Trump was to be contacted regarding a complete package at the Von's No. 10 location with the idea in mind of working out a deal for a new market on additional property to be acquired by the purchase of adjacent dwellings.

13. Assignments for Walter Von der Ahe and Del Hayden were discussed and it was finally concluded that their most important contribution to the success of the new operation would be a continual contact with the retail stores.

It was brought out that the Supervisors for the respective Departments get so close to their own operation that they fail to see or report the overall store impression or appearance, and it was thought that both Walter and Del should visit all stores constantly to see if the store is maintaining the personality or image which we desire it to have, and this means that the store should be checked—

(a) General overall appearance or impression to the customer
(b) The atmosphere

(c) The merchandising effort in all departments
(d) The effort to compete with the other stores in the area
(e) The condition of the physical property and whether alterations, repairs or maintenance were required.

A report of each visit is to be made up and submitted to the Executive Committee. The visits to the stores are to be fact-finding and not supervisorial, nor should Del and Walter attempt to supervise because this could only lead to confusion. It might be a good idea if a reporting form is developed because this could save a lot of unnecessary duplication in preparing the reports.

The company must also accept its share of civic responsibility and it could very well be that Del and Walter could be the executives to represent and discharge our philanthropic and civic obligations.

14. Recently we named a Management Committee consisting of 19 persons. Upon reflection it was decided that this group is too large for effective management, so it was decided to re-vamp the structure of the Management Committee to include only the following persons:—to create Administration Committee.

James Ball
Harold Ward
Victor Hinson
Norman Bolstad
George Carter
Kenneth Olsen
Edward Hirschman

Mr. Del Hayden is the Chairman of the Administration Committee and is responsible for calling it into session on alternating weeks with the Division Head Meeting.

Mr. Victor Hinson is requested to act as Secretary of the Administration Committee meeting and submit the minutes of the proceedings to the members of the committee as well as the members of the Executive Committee.

15. The Division Heads will meet on alternating weeks with the Management Committee and shall be composed of

James Ball
Harold Ward
Norman Bolstad
Victor Hinson
Paul Marshall
Kenneth Doyle
Don Bushmeyer
George Carter
Kenneth Olsen
William Pugh
Edward Hirschman
Myron Van Ness
Charley Harvey
Stoddard Johnston
Jack Smith
Bob Hearn
Dick Chute

Mr. Walter Von der Ahe is in charge of calling this meeting into session and we request Mr. Charley Harvey to act as Secretary, take the minutes and provide copies to all members including the members of the Executive Committee.

It is emphasized that both committees shall have the right to request anyone in the organization to appear before them for any purpose whatsoever and this includes defining company policy to explaining or defending positions and decisions.

Both committees shall function pursuant to an Agenda, and in this regard Mr. Del Hayden is responsible for preparing the agenda of the Management Committee and Walter Von der Ahe, likewise, is responsible for the agenda of the Division Head's Meeting. It is suggested that both men consult with the members of their committees for the items which are to appear on the agenda. It is felt that the items for the agenda should emanate from the members of the Committee and not from the respective Chairmen, as we want these committees to function through the people represented on their respective rosters.

16. Mr. W. L. Von der Ahe was instructed to prepare a schedule of those persons recommended for consideration under the Stock Option plan.

17. Mr. W. R. Hayden should be included in the company's salary continuation plan for executives.

18. Mr. Charles Harvey was appointed to be in charge of customer relations and in this connection he will handle all customer complaints, whether received over the telephone or by mail. He is to make a memo of the complaint and refer it to the department in interest and then follow up to see that it is satisfactorily concluded. A duplicate copy of the memo should be given to either the operating or sales and merchandising head, or the personnel department, depending upon the nature of the complaint.

19. Charley Harvey is also requested to handle all requests for donations. Miss Kathleen Saxelby has been handling these for the Von's group and is now requested to turn her files over to Charley Harvey so that he can gradually assimilate all donations into one account. This also applies to the Discount Cards for charitable organizations etc.

Charles Harvey is also asked to get a list of memberships in—

1. All the respective Chambers of Commerce
2. Trade Associations and the like
3. Subscriptions to magazines etc.
4. Investigate the effectiveness and merit of each so that he can report to the Executive Committee on those which should be renewed and those which should be dropped.

In this connection we want all memberships etc. to expire with each calendar year and review them once a year in January to determine whether we shall continue with them or not.

20. Salaries, bonuses etc. were discussed and a schedule of personnel of both former companies showing the integration and amount of modifications and adjustment represented and approved as amended. Mr. W. L. Van der Ahe is in charge of putting the new schedule into effect beginning with the first day of the Fifth Period which is, April 25th. 1960.

21. Green tape was dicussed and it was decided to let the Tape Plan continue to dwindle out without any active effort on the company's part to hasten its termination. At the present time there is approximately $158,000.00 in reserve.

22. The Fact's Consolidated questionnaire concerning the Haddad property on Ventura was approved and the company authorized to proceed with the interviewing.

23. The company's long term indebtedness was discussed and it was decided to pay off immediately the note to Elizabeth Sloan in the principle amount of $43,692.77, being the balance remaining as at April 16, 1960. There is another note with Equitable Life, original term 20 years for $2,500,000.00 dated December 2, 1958 at 5¼%, payable $43,594.00 each quarter, principal and interest. The balance as at April 1, 1960 was $2,120,000.00.

The other loan with the Security Bank has previously been discussed, however, it is interesting to note that the unpaid balance is at this date—$1,812,500.00. Payments are $62,500.00 principal plus interest each three months. The original note for 10 years, dated August 9, 1957 was for $2,500,000.00—interest at 5%.

T. A. Von der Ahe.

Interrogatory No. 2

Supply the following information as to the organization and operation of Von's, Shopping Bag, and the Combined Companies:

A. List each major management division and each separate operating unit of Von's and Shopping Bag on each of the following dates:
(1) January 1, 1960.
(2) March 1, 1960.

B. Describe the functions and duties of each division and unit listed in answer to Interrogatories 2A.

C. (As amended by agreement of counsel for the parties.) List the fixed assets (i.e., major facilities such as warehouses, produce docks or general offices) operated by Von's, Shopping Bag or "the Combined Companies" on January 1, March 25 and June 1, 1960, and the name of the management unit ultimately responsible therefor.

D and E. (As amended by agreement of counsel for the parties.)
List the total number of employees as of January 1, 1960 employed in each of the major management units listed in Exhibits A and B, and the total number of employees as of June 1, 1960 in each of the major management units listed in Exhibit C to the partial answers (filed June 27, 1960) to plaintiff's interrogatories.

F. Set forth the major management division and operating units of Von's and Shopping Bag which have been combined into each of the divisions, units and departments of the Combined Companies listed in answer to Interrogatory 2E, above.

G. (As amended by agreement of counsel for the parties.)
Are you currently considering the sale of any of your major fixed assets or the elimination or consolidation of any of your operations or departments? If so, describe the proposed changes and the reasons therefor.

H. If the answer to Interrogatory 2G above was in the affirmative, set forth the information requested in Interrogatories 2A to 2D(5) above based upon your plans or projected operations for the following dates:

A. January 1, 1961.
B. January 1, 1962.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 2 (As Amended):

A. This subdivision of the interrogatory was answered in Defendant's Partial Answers to Plaintiff's Interrogatories filed June 27, 1960.

B. This subdivision of the interrogatory was answered in Defendant's Partial Answers to Plaintiff's Interrogatories filed June 27, 1960.

C. (As amended)

Von's fixed assets or major facilities as of January 1, 1960 and the management units responsible therefor were as follows:

Asset	Management Unit
28 Retail Grocery Stores (and others in course of construction)	Sales and Promotion Department and Store Operations Department
Distribution Center (Warehouse and Garage, etc.)	Warehouse and Transportation Department
Delicatessen Kitchen	Delicatessen Division
Produce Dock	Produce Division
General Offices	Various Administrative Departments

There was no change in said assets or responsible management units between January 1 and March 25, 1960. Said assets were retained after the merger of March 28, 1960 and the appropriate management units of "the Combined Companies," as set forth below, became responsible therefor.

Shopping Bag's fixed assets or major facilities as of January 1, 1960 and the management units responsible therefor were as follows:

Asset	Management Unit
38 Retail Grocery Stores (and others in course of construction)	Meat, Produce and Frozen Food Department; Liquor, Department Store, Fountain and Bakery Production Department; and Grocery, Delicatessen and Bakery Sales Department
Distribution Center (Warehouse and Garage, etc.)	Warehouse and Transportation Department
Produce Dock	Meat, Produce and Frozen Food Department
Bakery	Liquor, Department Store, Fountain and Bakery Production Department
Delicatessen Wrapping Room	Grocery, Delicatessen and Bakery Sales Department
General Offices	Various Administrative Departments

There was no change in said assets or responsible management units between January 1 and March 25, 1960, except that Shopping Bag disposed of its produce dock during that time. All other of said assets were retained after the merger of March 28, 1960, and the appropriate management units of "the Combined Companies," as set forth below, became responsible therefor.

"The Combined Companies" fixed assets or major facilities as of June 1, 1960, and the management units responsible therefor were as follows:

Asset	Management Unit
67 Retail Grocery Stores (and others in course of construction)	Sales and Promotion Department and Store Operations Department
2 Distribution Centers	Warehouse and Transportation Department
Delicatessen Kitchen and Delicatessen Wrapping Room	Delicatessen Division
Produce Dock	Produce Division
Bakery	Bakery Division
General Offices	Various Administrative Departments

D and E. (As amended)

The total number of employees as of January 1, 1960 employed in each of Von's major management units as shown on said Exhibit A are as follows:

Management Unit	Number of Employees
Accounting Department	41
Security Department	6
Sales & Promotion Department	2
Store Operations Department	5
Advertising Department	5
Personnel Department	9
Warehouse & Transportation Department	107
Grocery Division	1118
Meat Division	308
Produce Division	145
Delicatessen Division	67
Liquor Division	40
Drug Division	34
Fountain Division	61

In addition, Von's had about 7 employees doing maintenance work and about 10 employees working in Von's general offices but not assigned to any department.

The total number of employees as of January 1, 1960 employed in each of Shopping Bag's major management units as shown on Exhibit B are as follows:

Management Unit	Number of Employees
Administrative & Accounting Department	79
Advertising & Promotion Department	8
Warehouse & Transportation Department	99
Meat, Produce & Frozen Food Department	343
Liquor, Department Store, Fountain & Bakery Production Department	441
Grocery, Delicatessen, Drugs & Bakery Sales Department	1117

In addition, Shopping Bag employed about 16 employees who did maintenance work.

The total number of employees as of June 1, 1960 employed by the major management units of "the Combined Companies" as shown on said Exhibit C are as follows:

Management Unit	Number of Employees
Accounting Department	127
Security Department	6
Sales & Promotion Department	3
Store Operations Department	5
Advertising Department	7
Personnel Department	14
Warehouse & Transportation Department	200
Grocery Division	2100
Meat Division	543
Produce Division	255
Delicatessen Division	82
Liquor Division	150
Drug Division	38
Fountain Division	84
Department Store Division	116
Bakery Division	108

In addition, Von's had about 23 employees doing maintenance work as of June 1, 1960.

F. This subdivision of the interrogatory was answered in Defendant's Partial Answers to Plaintiff's Interrogatories filed June 27, 1960.

G. (As amended)

Yes. The former Von's distribution center is up for sale. That distribution center is being sold because the former Shopping Bag distribution center is adequate to serve the needs of "the Combined Companies." A new tenant is being sought for Von's general offices because the former Shopping Bag offices are adequate to serve the needs of "the Combined Companies." See also the answer to Interrogatory No. 26.

H. It is not presently known what changes, if any, will be made in Von's fixed assets, management divisions, operating units or number of employees as of January 1, 1961 or January 1, 1962. New stores will be constructed and operated in the future, however. See Exhibit F to the answer to Interrogatory No. 6. Likewise, it may be that certain stores will be disposed of prior to January 1, 1962.

Interrogatory No. 2:

Supply the following information as to the organization and operation of Von's, Shopping Bag, and the Combined Companies:

A. List each major management division and each separate operating unit of Von's and Shopping Bag on each of the following dates:

(1) January 1, 1960.
(2) March 1, 1960.

B. Describe the functions and duties of each division and unit listed in answer to Interrogatories 2A.

C. List every asset or facility operated or controlled by Von's and Shopping Bag on each of the dates listed in paragraphs A(1) and A(2), and designate the management division or operating unit listed in Interrogatory 2A which was responsible for the operation of the asset or facility. Supply the following information as to each such asset or facility:

(1) The address of the asset or facility.
(2) A description of the asset or facility.
(3) A statement as to whether the facility was owned or leased.

D. List the total number of employees employed by Von's and Shopping Bag on each date listed in paragraphs A(1) and A(2) of these interrogatories for each of the following organizations or uints:

(1) Employed by both firms.
(2) Employed by Von's.
(3) Employed by Shopping Bag.
(4) Employed by each of the management divisions and operating units listed in answer to Interrogatory 2A.
(5) Employed by each operating asset or facility listed in answer to Interrogatory C. (This will include each separate warehouse facility or each separate store.)

E. Supply the information requested in Interrogatories 2A to 2D (5) inclusive, for the Combined Companies for each of the following dates:

A. April 1, 1960.
B. June 1, 1960.

F. Set forth the major management division and operating units of V on's and Shopping Bag which have been combined into each of the divisions, units and departments of the Combined Companies listed in answer to Interrogatory 2E, above.

G. State whether any consideration has been given to future changes in the organizational setup or operation of the Combined Companies. If so, state the nature of the consideration given to such changes showing the following:

(1) The date of such consideration.
(2) The persons participating in the consideration.
(3) The nature and extent of the consideration.
(4) The statements made by each person at each such meeting.
(5) The decision reached as a result of such consideration.
(6) Whether any documents were prepared or received with respect to such consideration. If so, supply the date and a statement as to the nature of such documents.

H. If the answer to Interrogatory 2G above was in the affirmative, set forth the information requested in Interrogatories 2A to 2D (5) above based upon your plans or projected operations for the following dates:

A. January 1, 1961.
B. January 1, 1962.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 2:

A and B. The basic operating units of Von's as of January 1, 1960 were 28 retail food stores. Von's also had a warehouse and distribution center, a produce dock, a delicatessen kitchen and general offices. The major manage-

The basic operating units of the "Combined Companie as of April 1, 1960 were 66 retail food stores represent a combined total of the stores formerly operated by Vo and Shopping Bag separately. The "Combined Com nies" also retained the warehouses, produce dock, bak delicatessen kitchen and general offices each had as of Ma 1, 1960, as set forth in answer to Interrogatory No. 2A.
major management divisions of the "Combined Com nies" as of April 1, 1960, which divisions represent an i gration of the major management divisions of Von's Shopping Bag as depicted on Exhibits A and B, are forth in the organizational chart attached hereto marked Exhibit C. There was no change in the operat units or major management divisions of the "Combi Companies" between April 1, 1960 and June 1, 1960, ex that an additional retail food store was opened during period of time.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 67

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von der Ahe, May 4, 1961.

* * * * * * *

Q. What items does Certified handle? Specifically do they handle dairy products?

A. Specifically they do not handle those items you call dairy products, such as fresh milk and cream and cottage cheese and things of that nature.

Q. Do they handle meats?

A. No.

Q. Do they handle bakery products such as bread?

A. No. (pp 41-42)

* * * * * * *

Q. Did you have to make a deposit with Certified?

A. Yes.

Q. How much of a deposit would that be?

A. At that time I believe the deposit was an amount equal to two weeks purchases. (p. 43)

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 68

Admissions in Deposition of William R. Hayden, Former President of Shopping Bag Food Stores, on May 12, 1960.

* * * * * * *

Q. As a result of the merger between Von and Shopping Bag has the purchasing of the two firms been consolidated?

A. I would say a great part of it has, yes. (p. 19)

* * * * * * *

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 69

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, on May 4, 1961.

* * * * * * *

Q. Prior to the merger did all the Von's stores carry the same price on the same item of merchandise?

A. That was our policy, uniform pricing, yes.

Q. Since the merger have the Shopping Bag stores started to carry the same prices as the Von's stores?

A. We are on a uniform pricing system, yes. (p. 19)

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 70

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, on May 12, 1960.

• • • • • • •

Q. What facilities did you refer to as being "complementary"?

A. We have a new distributing center with a very adequate delicatessen kitchen with products for sale through the delicatessen, which Shopping Bag had none.

Shopping Bag has a bakery department, which the Von's had none.

We have a produce distributing dock which is adequate to handle both companies. Shopping Bag had a very inadequate setup.

Q. Have you discontinued the Shopping Bag produce distributing dock?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you now being supplied by the Shopping Bag bakery department?

A. To a minor degree.

Q. Do you expect to increase the degree to which they will supply you?

A. That at the moment is a question we have not fully determined, whether Von's will give bigger support to the Shopping Bag bakery or not. This becomes an operational problem we haven't answered yet. (pp. 10-11)

• • • • • • •

Q. Now, referring back to page 1 of the proxy statement marked for identification as Exhibit No. 1, you say, "(a) Overhead, general and administrative expenses are expected to be reduced as a result of the elimination of duplication."

As part of this elimination of duplication have you merged the purchasing departments of Von and Shopping Bag?

A. Yes, sir. (pp. 53-54)

• • • • • • •

By Mr. Coyle:

Q. Now, referring to paragraph (b) on page 1 of the document marked for identification as Exhibit 1, it states that the "Total advertising expenses are expected to be substantially reduced, since duplication will be avoided, and the advertising campaigns of the combined companies can be more economically and effectively carried out."

What's been done to effectuate this advantage which you say will result from the merger?

A. Well, Mr. Coyle, I think that's almost self-explanatory. We have avoided duplication in advertising with the consequent savings in the advertising expenses.

Q. Have you merged the advertising staffs of the two companies?

A. Yes, sir, we have. (pp. 59-60)

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 71

Admissions in Deposition of Theodore A. Von der Ahe, President of Von's Grocery Company, on May 12, 1960.

• • • • • • •

Q. Does Von's, in the course of its business, seek new store locations in new areas?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any people employed by Von's whose major job is to seek new locations?

A. Well, Mr. Hayden is the man who is in charge of store expansion, which includes new locations. So I guess I would have to answer yes, Mr. Hayden, working for Von's, is in charge of new store locations.

Q. Prior to Mr. Hayden's coming with Von's was anyone employed in this activity?

A. That is work that fell upon my shoulders, store expansion and new locations; and I did have one or two brokers working for us always looking for new store locations. (pp. 43-44)

• • • • • • •

Q. In the business of seeking new store locations does more than one chain ever seek the same location?

A. I would answer by saying that probably once in a while an area is being developed where a major shopping center would be construced [sic] and the developers could conceivably be contacted by several chains for the market location. (p. 44)

• • • • • • •

Q. Do you keep a record, or do you have records in your business of these instances?

A. No. Every day we are submitted quite a few possible market locations. The file would be voluminous if we attempted to keep them. We only retain what is of interest to us.

Q. Who submits these new market locations?

A. They come in from all sources; owners themselves, prospective developers and from real estate agents.

Q. Can you name some of the real estate agents who customarily send you locations?

A. Coldwell Banker submits quite a few. W. I. Hollingsworth has submitted a few.

I would say almost all of them from time to time submit locations to us.

Q. When these locations are submitted do you have any procedure for processing them?

A. Well, I can't say that we have a procedure, no. We usually go out and look at the site and if it looks good, then we try to negotiate.

Q. You say "we." Does that mean you or Mr. Hayden, or both of you?

A. Well, speaking of the merged companies now, Mr. Hayden goes out and looks at them.

Q. Prior to the merger was it you?

A. Prior to the merger it fell my responsibility in Von's and Mr. Hayden in Shopping Bag. (pp. 49-50)

Re Your File Number 896,450-13

Dear Mr. Vaughn:

In your letter of May 11 you asked us for information on the number of grocery stores operating in Los Angeles and Orange Counties during each year since 1940. The information you requested is shown on the attached sheet for the years 1947 to date.

We furnished the data for grocery stores and other food stores in order that the information could be furnished for the last three years of the 1940 decade. Prior to January 1, 1947, our sales tax permits were classified in a manner which would not permit us to identify either grocery stores or other foods stores because no distinction was made between manufacturers, wholesalers, or retailers. We hope the information on grocery stores for the past 12 years and for food stores for the past 15 years will prove useful to your purpose.

Here are the answers to the specific questions raised in your letter concerning our data.

(a) The number of outlets are derived from outstanding permits which are issued to applicants for sales tax permits.

(b) We use the Standard Industrial Classification Manual for classifying our food stores. We do not use sales volume, store area, or any other factors. If the majority of the gross receipts from a business concern stems from the sale of groceries or products usually handled by grocery stores, the establishment is classified as a grocery store.

(c) We do not classify meat markets, poultry markets, delicatessens, produce markets, or other specialty shops such as dairy drive-ins, as grocery stores. All of these establishments have been classified as other food stores since January 1, 1950.

The cost of compiling these data was $15.00. Please make a check for this amount payable to the State Board of Equalization and mail to Mrs. Gladys Burrows, Cashier, 1020 N Street, Sacramento 14.

Very truly yours, John B. Marshall, Senior Statistician Research and Statistics.

Dear Mr. Alsup:

This is in reply to your letter of June 21 requesting information on the gross sales of grocery stores whose sales tax permits were closed out in 1960.

We have identified all of the grocery stores in Los Angeles County and in Orange County whose sales tax permits were terminated in 1960. For each of these places of business we have established the actual or estimated annual gross sales as reported to us on tax returns. In the overwhelming majority of the cases we had the actual gross sales for the last full year immediately preceding the quarter in which the business was discontinued. In some instances the stores were not in business for a full year. In these instances we used the available full quarters of reported gross sales and expanded the figures to an estimated annual gross sales figure. In a very few cases the estimate of the annual gross sales had to be based on a period of less than a full quarter. In these instances we used the number of days the business was actually in operation to establish an estimate of the gross for a full year.

Altogether there were 837 single outlet concerns and 102 grocery stores operated by multiple outlet concerns that were closed out in 1960 in the two counties under study.

The frequency distribution of the annual gross sales of these concerns are shown on the next page.

Annual gross sales Under	Grocery stores operated by multiple outlet concerns*	Other grocery stores	Total
$10,000	1	68	69
$10,000 to $19,999	1	98	99
$20,000 to $49,999	1	239	240
$50,000 to $99,999	4	189	193
$100,000 to $199,000	3	114	117
$200,000 to $499,999	19	85	104
$500,000 to $999,999	35	24	59
Over $1,000,000	38	20	58
Total	102	837	939

* This excludes the Shopping Bag Stores which were involved in a merger of which we were aware.

The cost of compiling these data was $225.00. Please make a check for this amount payable to the State Board of Equalization and mail it to Mrs. Gladys Burrows, Cashier, 1020 N Street, Sacramento 14.

Let me know if I can be of any further assistance to you.

Very truly yours, John B. Marshall, Senior Statistician Research and Statistics.

Re United States v. Von's Grocery Co.

Dear Mr. Vaughn:

In your letter of February 20 you requested certain information relative to the names and addresses of grocery stores located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area that were closed out since January 1, 1960, and a more detailed breakdown of gross sales of grocery stores in the area opened in 1960 and closed out by November 15, 1961.

The information that you have requested is being transmitted herewith. It was not possible to provide you with the names and addresses of all of the grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area that closed their businesses in 1960. We have found 38 of the grocery stores operated by multiple outlet concerns that were closed out in the period under study and 176 of those operated by independent concerns. We do not keep records of closed-out accounts indefinitely. When a taxpayer has paid his liability in full and is no longer in business we transfer the records to the archives where they are retained for a relatively short period of time, after which they are destroyed. Only a few of the accounts in which you are interested were still in our active files. Most of them were in archives and a substantial number of them had already been destroyed.

I hope the lists that have been compiled will be useful. The accounts whose taxable transactions were shown in Table B has been identified and the names and addresses of the particular stores for which you want information has been compiled and is enclosed.

The frequency distribution that you requested with respect to grocery stores doing less than $500,000 of annual gross sales has also been prepared and is being transmitted herewith.

The cost of compiling this data was $260. Please make a check for this amount payable to the State Board of Equalization and mail to Mrs. Gladys Burrows, Cashier, 1020 N Street, Sacramento.

Very truly yours, John B. Marshall, Senior Statistician Research and Statistics.

Record of Chain Store Grocery Locations in the Los Angeles Market Area

(See Accompanying Map)
(Not attached)

Chain Grocery Store Locations

This Booklet accompanies the map on which Grocery Chain locations are spotted—a different color, or pattern, map tack for each of 28 chains.

The map is the responsibility of The Business Research Department of The Los Angeles Examiner.

The store locations were provided, upon our request, by the grocery chains listed. The suggested cut-off date was July, 1961. To the best of our knowledge, these lists represent the number of Chain Grocery stores in this area at that time. However, with new markets being opened so frequently, it is obvious that no listing would be strictly up to date.

A SURVEY TO DETERMINE EXISTING COMPETITION BETWEEN VON'S AND SHOPPING BAG MARKETS

December, 1959

A Report Based on a Survey of Customers Which Shows That as of December, 1959, There Was Little, If Any, Overlap in the Draw Areas of the Von's and Shopping Bag Stores Located in Whittier, La Habra, Garden Grove, Downey, Alhambra and Monterey Park.

A SURVEY TO DETERMINE EXISTING COMPETITION BETWEEN VON'S AND SHOPPING BAG MARKETS

December, 1959

INTRODUCTION

Facts Consolidated was requested to conduct a survey to determine the amount of competition existing between Von's and Shopping Bag markets at those locations in close proximity to each other.

Methodology

In order to determine the extent of competition, questions were asked as to: Where respondents do most of their grocery shopping; how often they shop there; what are the main reasons for shopping there; what other markets do they sometimes shop; and the intersection nearest their home.

The markets selected for the survey represent those Von's and Shopping Bag markets which are close to each other in the Los Angeles-Orange County area. These areas and markets have been numbered for ease in reporting and tabulation as follows:

Area #	Store #	Store
1	1	Von's, 15740 Whittwood, Whittier
	2	Shopping Bag, 1183 Quad Way, Whittier
	3	Shopping Bag, 127 North Hacienda, Whittier
2	4	Von's, 12151 Brookhurst, Garden Grove
	5	Shopping Bag, Brookhurst and Katella, Garden Grove
3	6	Von's, 10001 Paramount Boulevard, Downey
	7	Shopping Bag, Stonewood Shopping Center, Downey
4	8	Von's, 1000 East Valley Boulevard, Alhambra
	9	Shopping Bag, 2200 West Valley Boulevard, Alhambra
5	10	Von's, 2280 Atlantic Boulevard, Monterey Park
	11	Shopping Bag, 127 North Garfield, Monterey Park

Each store was covered by two or three staff interviewers stationed in the parking lot. Each interviewer was instructed to situate himself so as not to interfere with the other interviewers in his area.

Interviews were conducted from 4 PM to 10 PM Friday, November 13, 1959 and from 9 AM to 4 PM Saturday, November 14, 1959. This hourly schedule was set up in order to cover each market during the regular business hours during a 24 hour period.

A copy of the questionnaire follows this report.

Major Highlights

1. From a high of 77% in Whittier to a low of 57% in Monterey Park respondents interviewed in Von's parking lots named Von's as the market where most of their grocery shopping was done. (Page 1) Sixteen to 22% of these respondents named Von's as their second choice (page 3).

2. Among Shopping Bag parking lot respondents, the Whittier Quad Way Shopping Bag received the lowest rating as first choice market (50%) with the Whittier North Hacienda Shopping Bag receiving the highest rating, 71%, (Page 1). This market also received highest mention by its parking lot customers as their second choice, 17% (page 3).

3. In no area where Von's led as the market in which respondents do most of their shopping did Shopping Bag show up as an important second choice. (page 2)

4. When Shopping Bag led as the market where respondents do most of their shopping, Von's did not show up as the major second choice in any area. (page 2)

5. Convenience was the main reason given for shopping at Von's or Shopping Bag markets. (page 6)

6. Approximately two thirds of the respondents shop at the market where they do most of their shopping two times a week or more and about 50% shop weekly at their second choice market. (page 6)

The above factors reveal that the Von's markets and Shopping Bag markets studied are too far apart to draw a major portion of shoppers from each other's area.

Separate exhibits of dot maps show the store locations and the intersections nearest the homes of the respondents.

These maps show the small amount of customer overlap in each area which indicates the separate drawing power of each market.

The following 6 tables present the findings by area, store and total. The remaining tables report the detail for each market surveyed, pages 7-39.

In answer to Question 1: "Where do you do most of your grocery shopping?"

MAP OVERLAY STUDY FOR VON'S GROCERY COMPANY

October 1955

INTRODUCTION

Purpose

The purpose of the study was to determine the number, per cent and cumulative per cent of customers falling into a one, two and three mile radius of 22 Von's Markets. These were to be determined from the pattern of customer distribution found in the Mapping Study of September 1955.

Method

An acetate overlay was prepared with concentric circles drawn to scale indicating a one, two and three mile radius. Using the map from the previous study, this overlay was placed with its center directly over one of the store locations. The number of map pins falling into each circle was then noted and the per cent of all pins falling into each radius was computed. A cumulative per cent also was computed so that the total per cent of customers falling into a one, two or three mile radius for each store location can be readily seen. This process was repeated with the acetate overlay for each store location.

These numbers and percentages for each store are presented in the following tables. All percentages have been rounded in all tables. The per cent of pins placed for each mile radius for each store is lettered in India ink, along with the store number and the mile zone represented, on flat headed 5/8" map pins. These 5/8" map pins had been placed on the maps from the previous study to indicate the percentages within each mile zone.

A GROUP OF SUPERMARKET CHAINS IN THE LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA AREA

A Report Prepared by a Representative of the Kroger Company in Aug., 1957, Analyzing the Von's and Shoping Bag Stores and the Competition Each Faces in Its Particular Locality.

AN OBSERVATIONAL STUDY OF A GROUP SUPERMARKET CHAINS IN THE LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA AREA

AUGUST, 28, 1957

Howard Kruger

Summary

Observations were made of the stores operated by Von, by Shopping Bag and by Alexander in the Los Angeles area. The following report gives details of the study which was undertaken to define the desirability of these groups as a basis for entry into this market.

As a result of the information obtained the following recommendations are made:

Von's is generally desirable from a merchandising viewpoint (in spite of a number of stores which need remodel or relocation) because of its stature in the area, actual coverage of the market, and current money-making strength.

Shopping Bag is likewise desirable because, in the area where it is found, it has generally excellent physical facilities and they offer a potential for growth.

Alexander's, although several stores are first-rate, is less desirable because of overlaps with Shopping Bag, so the contribution of Alexander's would be small.

The following pages carry details of the study showing:

1. The market in general and ratings of the chains.
2. A comparison of retail prices.
3. The stores, their layout, their competition, a description and summary for each.
4. Photos of some personality traits of the chains.

The Market in General

The grocery chains of the Los Angeles area topped one billion dollars in sales for the first time in the calendar year 1956. $1,017,256,400 or 55.83% of total grocery sales, according to the Los Angeles Examiner. Attached is their breakdown of the figure into "share of market" for the 34 leading chains and the percent to total of each chain. Von's appears as third with 4.5%, Shopping Bag fifth with 3.7%, and Alexander thirteenth with 1%.

Likewise attached is the continuing home audit of the Los Angeles Times, showing where the customer "bought the majority" of her purchases separately for groceries, for meats, and for produce. This covers 18 leading chains and is not share of market, but gives a comparison of individual chain strength. Von's is most frequently third, Shopping Bag fifth or sixth and Alexander ninth.

The Market as Seen by Informed Individuals

A limited number of informed personalities in the food industry were questioned about the relative rank of leading food chains in the market. Following are some of their comments:

Mr. Tom Virgil of Star Kist, tuna packers, rates the leaders as follows: Safeway, Ralph's, Von's, Market Basket, Shopping Bag and Alpha Beta. He indicates that Safeway's strength is in the rural areas. Up until the last eighteen months Safeway had been described as a sleeping giant but today is considered the most aggressive on national brands.

Ralph's he describes as the price leader. This was established about three years ago when Ralph's held all volume items to 6 percent markup for about three months.

Von's, in third position, reportedly follows Ralph's closely on price; is described as outstanding on produce.

Shopping Bag is best known for excellent meat and produce as well as friendliness of employees. A new central bakery has just been completed which will eliminate on-premise bakeries.

Mr. Bill Massey of Brown-Massey Associates, food brokers, describes the market as follows: Safeway is No. 1, followed by Ralph's, Von's, Market Basket, Shopping Bag and Thriftimart in that order. He believes that Safeway's current reorganization will help but that the time has gone past when it could have owned the market. Mr. Massey discussed the California Milk Marketing Act of 1935 which has resulted in enormously profitable dairy operations. Safeway, Ralph's, Von's and others are enjoying profits from dairies.

Mr. Meyer Lewis of Flotill Products, food canners, puts Ralph's in #1 spot, followed by Von's Safeway, Market Basket, Shopping Bag and Alexander in that order. He likewise emphasizes the importance of dairies and dairy profits in grocery operations here.

Mr. Lewis commented on some small chain mergers, stating that Roth Markets ($10,000,000 sales) has recently purchased Fox Markets ($18,000,000 sales). Likewise Food Giant ($22,000,000 sales) is reportedly purchasing Hiram's ($12,000,000 sales).

Charles Rose of the Los Angeles Times rates the chains in the following Order: Safeway, Ralph's, Von's, Market Basket, Shopping Bag, Thriftmart. Safeway is reportedly on an aggressive program of store location which involves razing old buildings in well settled neighborhoods to get a modern store, rather than going into new growth areas where there is new competition. An example is their new market at Sunset and LaBrea. A & P is said to have been run "at the end of a teletype", accounting for its absence in the above ratings.

A Comparison of Retail Prices

Von's retail prices, as reported by Grocers' Weekly Guide, were studied for the week of August 14, 1957.

2435 retail prices were selected for comparison with like items as priced by Ralph's.

1550 items were priced the same. Of this list, 1520 were grocery items and 30 were meat items.

600 items were higher at Von's. Of this list 565 were grocery items and 35 were meat items.

285 items were lower at Von's. Of this list 256 were grocery items and 29 were meat items.

The above comparisons were made with Ralph's, because it is generally considered to be the price leader in the market. Differences between Ralph's and Von's usually were not large, being pennies to fractional parts of a penny.

Similar data is not gathered for Shopping Bag or Alexander. However, general observations indicate that their retails are slightly higher than either Ralph's or Von's.

Ratings of Stores

Each individual store described in this report has been rated in the following manner:

First-Rate:	A growing store with a future—desirable.
Second-Rate:	A store with a qualified or limited outlook as described.
Third-Rate:	A poor store without a future—undesirable.

On this basis, Von's rates as follows:

First-Rate:	12 stores
Second-Rate:	13 stores
Third-Rate:	1 store
	26 stores studied

The ratings for Shopping Bag are:

First-Rate:	17 stores
Second-Rate:	8 stores
Third-Rate:	1 store
	26 stores studied

Alexander's rating are:

First-Rate:	4 stores
Second-Rate:	3 stores
	7 stores studied

Von's #1—11471 Long Beach Blvd., Lynwood, Calif.

Summary: This is an old store with a face-lift. It continues to have a good hold on the trade but rates as second grade because of physical limitations.

Average Wkly. Sales	$44,000	Age: 1952 Remodel
Average Net	3.22%	Lease Expires 1961
Ground Floor	17,000
Sales Floor	10,800 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	20,218
Checklanes	8	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	105

Competition: Market Basket, approximately one mile away at Long Beach Blvd. and Golden, is larger (selling floor 17,500 sq. ft., 10 checklanes) newer, and a better plant physically, but as yet appears to be obtaining only about $40,000 per week. Uses 2 grades of beef, has liquor and complete non-foods including housewares, stationery, soft goods.

Von's #2—1305 Wilshire Blvd., Santa Monica, Calif.

Summary: This Big, Old Store is a Money-Maker and Appears to Own the Trading Area but Rates as Second Grade because a Major Remodel is much Needed.

Average Wkly. Sales	$81,000	Age: 1949
Average Net	4.67	Lease Expires 1973
Ground Floor	17,435
Sales Floor	12,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	20,585
Checklanes	10	Perishable Freshness—Excellent
Parking	245

Competition: Safeway at 7th and Montana, about one mile away, is small, four checkouts, and old. Two Lillywhites at 14th and 17th on Montana are small and appear to be concessionaire operations. There is also a Baer's on 17th. None of these constitute a threat. Hope is that Von's #2 is overhauled before a sharp new operation drops in on the area.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Sales

Von's #3—3667 West 3rd St., Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is a fine looking small remodel but is outclassed by large Ralph's (Est. $100,000 sales) and Safeway (Est. $60,000) both within ¼ mile. Rated second grade.

Average Wkly. Sales	$27,000	Age: 1956
	$54,000
Average Net	.79	Lease Expires 1966
Ground Floor	7,200
Sales Floor	6,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Excellent
Total Space	9,108
Checklanes	4	Perishable Freshness—Excellent

Competition: Ralph's at 3rd and Vermont has about 13,500 sq. ft. of selling floor, 8 checklanes, excellent customer appeal and probably does $100,000 per week. Safeway at 3rd and Vermont has about 14,000 sq. ft. seven checklanes and does an estimated $60,000.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Sales
Small Fish Case
Housewares
Stationery

Von's #4—2280 Atlantic Blvd., Monterey Park, Calif.

Summary: This is a first-rate successful store in a growing neighborhood and appears to be out in front versus three competitors.

Average Wkly. Sales	$105,000	Age: 1954
Average Net	4.34	Lease Expires 1974
Ground Floor	26,000
Sales Floor	19,500 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	32,463
Checklanes	12	Perishable Freshness—Excellent
Parking	410

Competition: McDaniel at Pomona and Beverly is an outstanding store only ⅛ mile from VON'S with similar facilities and probably gets $80,000. Two Market Baskets, one a mile away doing an estimated $30,000, and one ⅛ mile doing possibly $20,000 aren't strong. The former is at Garfield and Pomona, a well equipped store, too large for this volume and the smaller one is at Atlantic and Pomona.

Von's #5—10001 Paramount Blvd., Downey, Calif.

Summary: This is a first-rater. A shopping center might develop around it; meanwhile it outreaches the one competitor.

Average Wkly. Sales	$66,000	Age: 1955
	$75,000
Average Net	3.84	Lease Expires 1980

Von's #6—1027 West Manchester, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is definitely third rate. An old open-front store with service meat, completely out of date and outclassed by a Ralph's.

Average Wkly. Sales	$21,000	Age: 1936
Average Net	2.30	No lease
Ground Floor	9,000
Sales Floor	5,600 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Fair
Total Space	9,600
Checklanes	4	Perishable Freshness—Fair
Parking	112

Competition: Ralph's at Vermont and 78th Place is about ½ mile away. While old it is bigger and better merchandised than VON'S #6. There are likewise two small independents in the neighborhood.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Sales
Stationery
Phonograph Records

Von's #7—1020 South Fairfax, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is a small old-type store with service meat and again is outclassed by Ralph's. It possibly could be remodeled but meanwhile must be called second rate.

Average Wkly. Sales	$28,000	Age: 1950
Average Net	1.72	Lease Expires 1959
Ground Floor	9,600
Sales Floor	5,600 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	11,510
Checklanes	5	Parishable Freshness—Good
Parking	40

Competition: Ralph's within a mile on Wilshire at Hauser is larger (10,000 sq. ft. of selling space) and has better customer appeal. A 10,000 sq. ft. Big Town at Pico and La Cienega also takes a share. On the other hand Fox Market at Pico and Alfred, and a small independent, Carthay Center, are not factors.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Float only
Fish Case
Housewares Rack

Von's #8—3334 W. 8th St., Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is Exemplary of What Can Be Done With Old Stores By Remodel and Should Expect Continued Moderate Earnings. Second-rate Because of Physical Limitations.

Average Wkly. Sales	$36,000 [$48,000]	Age: 1956
Average Net	1.81	Lease Expires 1966
Ground Floor	9090
Sales Floor	6,800 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Excellent
Total Space	11,664
Checklanes	5	Perishable Freshness—Excellent
Parking	41

Competition: Safeway at Hobart and Eighth is ¼ mile away, but is an old pre-war type about 3,500 sq. ft. of selling floor and 3 checklanes. Peter Pan at Pico and Normandie is a small neighborhood store without a future. Carl's Palace at Serrano and 8th is ¼ mile away but is a poor sort of Palace, dirty and unattractive.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Sales
Small Liquor Dept.
Housewares
Magazines
Phonograph Records

Von's #9—840 So. Alvarado, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is Doubtless One of the Stores Which Built the New Supers but it Continues to Pay Off. Second Rate Because of Limited Future.

Average Wkly. Sales	$42,000	Age: 1954
Average Net	3.97	Lease Expires 1960
Ground Floor	10,101
Sales Floor	4,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	13,046
Checklanes	6	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	21

Competition: This is not close to other food stores, being in an area of old homes, third rate apartments and light industry. Residents include some orientals and other foreign extraction. Probably competition has not been attracted.

Extra Features

Housewares Rack
Magazines
Stationery

Von's #10—1020 So. Crenshaw Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: Old but has a Steady Draw and Pays Off. Marked Second-rate Because it is Vulnerable to Any Good New Competitor.

Average Wkly. Sales	$52,000	Age: 1950
Average Net.	4.60	Lease expires 1960
Ground Floor	11,520
Sales Floor	6,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	12,160
Checklanes	6	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	47

Competition: Club Market, 1118 South Crenshaw, one block away, and Serber's Forum within a mile (Pico near Crenshaw) both are in the $20,000 range but the former is a poor place with no features and the latter is a concession type only fair in appearance. It does have a pharmacy and some non-food lines.

Extra Features

Van DeKamp Float only
Housewares
Stationery
Magazines

Von's #11—1500 W. Pico Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is no Showplace but Pays a Return and Fits the Neighborhood, Classed as Second-rate.

Average Wkly. Sales	$31,000	Age: 1954
Average Net	2.64	Lease Expires 1964
Ground Floor	9,856
Sales Floor	6,750 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	9,856
Checklanes	5	Perishable Freshness—Fair
Parking	42

Competition: This is not competitive with food stores of any consequence. In an area of lower class whites and foreign extraction. There is also some light industry, warehousing. Little to attract another market.

Extra Features

Housewares
Stationery
Magazines
Fish Case
Van DeKamp shelves only

Von's #12—5029 So. Vermont, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is Definitely Second-rate and Appears Inferior to Competition. Both the Equipment and Operation Should be Reviewed.

Average Wkly. Sales	$30,000 [$55,000]	Age: 1942
Average Net	—.13	Lease Expires 1961
Ground Floor	14,040
Sales Floor	9,500 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Fair
Total Space	19,968
Checklanes	6	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	62

Competition: Ralph's at Vernon and Figueroa (1 mile away) with 10,000 sq. ft. of selling floor and apparently obtaining $40,000. Here Ralph's offers two grades of beef. Kory's at 58th and Vermont is 6/10 mile away and probably obtains $35,000 offering liquor, magazines, housewares, hosiery, film and phonograph records.

Extra Features

Sales Floor	10,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Fair to poor
Total Space	19,960
Checklanes	8	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	184

Competition: Jim Dandy within reach at Brompton and Atlantic is large (18,000 sq. ft. selling floor) and has snack bar, larger liquor store and other features, but probably does not exceed Von's in sales. McDaniel within a mile at 6135 So. Atlantic is an old, old store and makes Von's look better.

Von's #18—8857 So. Western Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is a Middle-Aged Store, Still Well Run and Going Strong, but has Service Meat Equipment and Should Look Forward to a Remodel. Second-Rate Compared to Von's Best.

Average Wkly. Sales	$71,000 [$75,000]	Age: 19[illegible]
Average Net	3.59	Lease Expires 1974
Ground Floor	13,600
Sales Floor	13,500 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	40,150
Checklanes	12	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	108

Competition: Ralph's, Crenshaw and Manchester, approximately one mile away has about 13,000 sq. ft. of selling floor and Bettendorf type shelving—probably as good volume as Von's. Lynn's at 85th and Crenshaw, near Ralph's, is smaller and poorly operated, probably not a factor here. Toy's Market, 92nd and Western, is 3/10 mile away, has about 7,500 sq. ft. selling floor and is apparently Japanese operated.

Sales Floor	14,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Excellent
Total Space	29,105
Checklanes	12	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	123

Competition: Panorama at 18000 Sherman Way, within one block of Von's is larger (20,000 sq. ft. selling floor) and gets an estimated $75,000. Three blocks away off Sherman is a Safeway of about 10,000 sq. ft. with 7 checklanes; 6/10 mile away at VanOwen and Roseda is a Fox (8 lanes) with 10,000 sq. ft. in grocery floor and 10,000 more in non-foods; one mile away is Thriftimart at 17625 Sherman with 15,000 sq. ft. All these are sharing a pie which is not large enough.

Von's #23—9011 Woodman Ave., Pocoima, Calif.

Summary: A First-Rate and Successful Store. Area is Growing and Competition is not Now Too Close.

Average Wkly. Sales	$113,000 [$121,000]	Age: 1954
Average Net	4.64	Lease Expires 1976
Ground Floor	26,000
Sales Floor	14,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Excellent
Total Space	33,244
Checklanes	13	Perishable Freshness—Good
Parking	630

Competition: Ralph's at Woodman and Van Nuys is one mile away, 20,000 sq. ft. floor, 6 checklanes, probably $55,000, and may be hurting a little. Panorama at Roscoe and Van Nuys, 25,000 sq. ft. floor, 17 checklanes, estimated volume at least $75,000. Both of these can handle more if Von relaxes.

Von's #24—13333 Riverside Drive, Sherman Oaks, Calif.

Summary: Again a First-Rate Von Store in a Growing Area With Competition Negligible at Present.

Average Wkly. Sales	$106,000	Age: 1955
Average Net	4.38	Lease Expires 1975
Ground Floor	21,450
Sales Floor	14,000 sq. ft.	Groc. Housekeeping—Good
Total Space	27,360
Checklanes	12	Perishable Freshness—Excellent
Parking	220

Competition: Monterey Market at Riverside and Coldwater has only about 3000 sq. ft. of selling floor and is apparently concessionaire type with separate grocery, meat, liquor and produce. It is ¾ mile to Von's #24 and is probably not taking a thing from it.

Competition: Hiram's within a mile is 24,000 sq. ft. selling floor plus nearly as much more for non-foods. Has all features of Von's #25 plus some men's wear, women's wear, yard goods and a camera department. Market Basket at Belleflower and Spring is 17,000 sq. ft. with 8 checklanes and gets an estimated $40,000. Alpha Beta at Whittier and Colima is 14,000 sq. ft. with 6 lanes and gets about $35,000. Thriftimart also within range but is a poor excuse for a modern supermarket.

#23 Shopping Bag—Glen Oaks & Irving, Burbank, Calif.

Summary: This is a Desirable First-Rate Store With Traffic Getting Features and Possibilities of Growth.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$50,000
Sales Floor	16,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

No immediate competition is apparent. This is a neighborhood shopping district which includes a junior department store, a drug store and a dry cleaner.

The store is laid out similarly to most Von's stores plus about 1500 sq. ft. toward the front set aside for a wide assortment of variety goods. All of the following are carried:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Photo Supplies
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery & Socks
Women's Wear
Men's Sportswear
Costume Jewelry

Also Liquor Department and Plant Bar

Von's Sites

#26—Garden Grove is described as under construction and an excellent location, although there are five markets within 1½ miles. The area has a growth potential and the site will feed on a small community shopping center. Will doubtless be a Class One store.

#28—Granada Hills is a fast growing new middle class area. Several housing developments are underway. No competition is evident nearby.

#29—Alhambra. Not visited.

#30—Torrance. This is called Torrance Triangle Shopping Center. It is near an airport and a new residential development is about ½ mile away. A Clark Market about one mile north is a strong looking competitor.

#31—Buena Park. This is described as a lower middle class growth area but was not visited.

#32—San Fernando. This is a well developed upper middle class neighborhood site. It looks like a good choice. The competition is in San Fernando business district.

#33—Canoga Park. This is on Canoga Canyon Boulevard apparently and isolated highway location. The area appears to be growing with new residential development underway.

#1 Shopping Bag—Foothill Blvd., and Scoville, Sunland, Calif.

Summary: Here is Another First-rate Store. This is Centrally Located in a Small Town Business District and Local Competition has Nothing to Touch it.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	14,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

The store is laid out in general much like Von's stores, with 1500-2000 sq. ft. set aside for variety goods or junior department store. All of the following are carried:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery & Socks
Women's Wear
Men's Sportswear
Costume Jewelry

Also Liquor Department and Plant Bar

#5 Shopping Bag—Foothill Blvd., Tujunga, Calif.

Summary: This Store is Between Two Much Larger Shopping Bags. Although Satisfactory in All Other Respects, it is Therefore Classed as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$25,000
Sales Floor	5,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	4
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

The store is located in the town of Tujunga, midway between Sunland and La Crescenta and is 2.2 miles from Shopping Bags at both locations.

There are no nearby competitors noted. This store may own the local neighborhood area. It carries the following extra features:

Liquor
Housewares
Stationery
Film
Hosiery & Socks
Tube Tester

#2 Shopping Bag—Foothill Blvd. and Cloud, La Crescenta, Calif.

Summary: Here is a Desirable First-rate Store With Impressive Extra Departments. It Appears to Be Obtaining Good Results.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$65,000
Sales Floor	13,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

There is a Safeway Store within range but the Shopping Bag is larger and more effective. In fact this store is one of the best Shopping Bags seen and the personnel appeared better than average.

The food departments are laid out similarly to the newer Von's stores but a junior department store is operated in the basement and a large garden store (3,000 sq. ft.) off of the parking lot in the rear. All of the following are carried:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery & Socks
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Also Liquor Department, Snack Bar, Bakery sales and Rotisserie.

#4 Shopping Bag—Honolulu and Market, Montrose, Calif.

Summary: This Desirable Store is Located in the Central Business District of a Small Town and is First-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	8,000
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

Outside competition does not appear to be a problem but here again this Shopping Bag is only 1.7 miles from a similar store at La Canada. In the other direction (2.3 miles) is La Crescenta with a Shopping Bag.

Layout is not unlike Von's although in this instance the rear floats are at right angles to the other, perhaps because of space limitations here. By the same token the usual extensive variety goods is eliminated. The following extra features are found, however:

Liquor Department
Van DeKamp Sales
Fish Case
Housewares
Stationery
Beauty and Health Aids
Film
Magazines
Pet Supplies

Shopping Bag—Foothill Blvd., and Beulah, La Canada, Calif.

Summary: This Desirable Store is First-rate. It Carries Out the Shopping Bag Pattern, However, Dropping the Variety Store Section Because of its Business District Location.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$50,000
Sales Floor	11,000 sq.ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

The location here is only 1.7 miles from Shopping Bag at Montrose. Closer competition is an Alexander of similar size, ½ mile away, which does not appear to be causing any problem.

The store follows the Shopping Bag and Von general layout. Here the following extra features are found.

Liquor Store
Large Snack Bar
Shopping Bag Bakery Sales
Housewares
Glassware
Stationery
Film
Magazines
Pet Supplies
Hosiery & Socks

Shopping Bag—Colorado and Dahlia, Glendale, Calif.

Summary: Although Well Repaired this Store is Too Small, Too Old and Too Close to Another Shopping Bag. Classed as Third-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$15,000
Sales Floor	5,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	4
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This store is located in a highway business district. The greatest competition would be from the Shopping Bag at Eagle Rock, ¾ mile away.

A typical smaller store, this has service meat and is generally on a restricted basis. The usual bakery concession is not available and only a float is used for baked goods. The following extras are carried, however:

Housewares
Magazines
Hosiery

Shopping Bag—Colorado & Eagle Rock, Eagle Rock, Calif.

Summary: Although this Store Apparently Obtains Desirable Volume, it Has Service Meat and Should be Remodeled. Classed as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	9,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

The only competition within range appears to be the small Shopping Bag at Glendale, ¾ mile away. A study might indicate that the customers of both could be served from one location.

The grocery floats are laid out in the same direction as the check lanes as is typical of local stores. All of the following extra features are carried:

Shopping Bag Bakery Sales
Liquor
Housewares
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery

Shopping Bag—Lincoln & West Figueroa, Pasadena, Calif.

Summary: This is a First-rate, Big Operation at a Busy Intersection and has Good Extra Features.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$70,000
Sales Floor	14,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Good

There is local competition within range but this store shows evidence of good acceptance and a firm hold on the trade.

The layout of the food departments is much like the Von Markets, plus a junior department store in a corner of the selling floor. Likewise there is a large garden store in back of the building, opening onto the parking lot. This includes a toy department and gift glassware.

The junior department store carries the following:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery & socks
Men's Wear
Women's Wear

Also liquor store and bakery sales.

Shopping Bag—Michilinda & Sierra Madre, Pasadena, Calif.

Summary: This is a Desirable First-rate Store in a Neighborhood Shopping Center Near the Foothills.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$70,000
Sales Floor	17,500
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

There is no competition nearby and the Shopping Bag apparently owns this neighborhood area which may very well have additional growth.

Food departments of this store are laid out much like those of Von's plus the usual junior department store in one corner. All of the following are carried:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear

In addition there is a large liquor store and a Shopping Bag bakery department.

Shopping Bag—Huntington & San Moreno, San Moreno, Calif.

Summary: This is a Desirable Small Operation But Would be Vulnerable to a Big Competitor. Classed as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$30,000
Sales Floor	9,500
Checklanes	5
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This small store has service meat and probably owes its present degree of success to the fact that no big competition has come in near by.

Layout includes a Shopping Bag bakery department and a large liquor store, plus the following extra features:

Housewares
Film
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Hosiery

Shopping Bag—Huntington & Bellehaven, San Moreno, Calif.

Summary: Although this Store Serves a Good Locale, it has Service Meat and is Not Too Sharp in Appearance. Rated Second-class.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$20,000
Sales Floor	7,600 sq. ft.
Checklanes	5
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Fair

This store has a bakery with a separate entrance in a corner of the building. It is without important nearby competition and located in a neighborhood which appears to have growth possibilities.

The following extra features are carried:

Large Liquor Store
Housewares
Magazines
Stationery
Phonograph Records
Film

Shopping Bag—Baldwin & Naomi, West Arcadia, Calif.

Summary: A Desirable First-rate Store Even With or Better than Anything Nearby.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$65,000
Sales Floor	12,500
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

This layout of this large store is identical to the newer type Von's. It is next to a major shopping strip development and does not appear vulnerable to anything in the area.

Here again Shopping Bag has one of its few Van DeKamp sales concessions. The following additional extras are carried:

Large lunch counter with booths
Large liquor department
Housewares
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Film
Tube Tester

Shopping Bag—Santa Anita & Huntington Drive, Arcadia, Calif.

Summary: While this Store Would be Desirable as Part of a Package, it is Not Up to the Usual Standards and Possibly Not Equal to the Market Basket Up the Street. Classified as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$25,000
Sales Floor	6,800 sq. ft.
Checklanes	5
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This is an older type store with service meat and could be improved. The Market Basket outshines it as does the West Arcadia Shopping Bag only 2 miles away.

The following features are offered:

Liquor Department
Shopping Bag Bakery
Small Fish Case
Housewares
Film
Magazines
Pet Supplies
Hosiery

Shopping Bag—Foothill & Primrose, Monrovia, Calif.

Summary: This Store is Desirable as Far as it Goes But Appears Too Small for the Job and Must be Classed as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$30,000
Sales Floor	6,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This is located in a small town business section and a larger store might pay if a better site can be found. No immediate competition is evident.

The store is laid out pretty much like the older Von's and offers modest extra facilities as follows:

Liquor Store
Shopping Bag Bakery
Small Fish Case
Housewares
Film
Pet Supplies
Tube Tester

Shopping Bag—Washington & Passons, Rivera, Calif.

Summary: This is a Desirable First-rate Store and Appears to be Doing Well in Spite of the Short Distance to the Pico Store.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$75,000
Sales Floor	17,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	9
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

Here again Shopping Bag has two strong markets practically shoulder to shoulder since there is only 1.6 mile to a similar operation at Whittier & Lindsey in Pico.

This store has a large liquor department, Shopping Bag bakery sales and an outdoor garden store.

In addition, about 1000 sq. ft. are set aside on the main selling floor for a junior department store handling the following:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Shopping Bag—Whittier & Lindsey, Pico, Calif.

Summary: First Rate and Desirable in Spite of the Closeness to the Rivera Store.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$75,000
Sales Floor	15,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	9
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

This is the other half of the closely located pair, being 1.6 miles north of the store at Washington and Passons in Rivera. Even more than the other store, this one appears to be doing what it was intended for and is desirable in most every way.

The layout is much like Von's only larger and includes a considerable junior department store utilizing about 2,700 sq. ft. out of the total. Items carried include:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Also liquor store and bakery sales.

Shopping Bag—Valley & Edgewood, Alhambra, Calif.

Summary: Although Some of the Equipment is Old, this Store is Generally Desirable and Appears to Have a Good Hold on the Territory. Classed as Second-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	7,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

Located in a neighborhood shopping district, there is no special competition in sight but the store is not entirely up to date since old style dry racks are found in the produce department.

The following features are seen:

Liquor Store
Shopping Bag Bakery sales
Housewares
Magazines
Pet Supplies
Hosiery

Shopping Bag—Garfield & Garvey, Monterey Park, Calif.

Summary: This Large Market is First-rate and Desirable.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	15,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

There is local competition within range but nothing seems to be causing this Shopping Bag any particular trouble.

A junior department store is included and utilizes approximately 1,500 sq. ft. of the selling floor, offering the following features:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Also liquor store and bakery sales.

Shopping Bag—137 East Valley, El Monte, Calif.

Summary: A Desirable First-rate Store Which Appears to be Well Run and Successful.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	10,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This location is in the shopping area of El Monte and once again not too far from the other El Monte Shopping Bag at Peck Road and Lower Azusa.

While the general layout is comparable to the newer Von's stores, this one has no large variety store as is common with Shopping Bag. The following are the extra features offered:

Liquor Department
Shopping Bag Bakery Sales
Lunch Counter
Housewares
Film
Magazines
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Tube Tester
Greeting Cards

Shopping Bag—Peck Road & Lower Azusa, El Monte, Calif.

Summary: While this Store Enjoys Local Acceptance, it Has Some Older Equipment and is Limited in its Potential. Classed as Second-rate.

Weekly Sales Estimate	$30,000
Sales Floor	9,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Fair
Perishable Freshness—	Good

As pointed out in description of the valley store, this is almost an overlap but seems to hold its own. There is a substation postoffice in the store and it has no competition in the immediate community.

Layout is somewhat different than most Shopping Bags with a portion of the floats at right angles to the main grocery floats. Meat is sold at a service counter.

Extra features available include:

Liquor Department
Shopping Bag Bakery Sales
Housewares
Glassware
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Greeting Cards

Shopping Bag—Arrow & Azusa, Covina, Calif.

Summary: This is a First-rate Store and is Desirable Although Volume Appears a Little Low for its Size.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	18,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This is a large shiny, new market and growth in the area will probably bring the volume up. A number of features are offered including a liquor store, Shopping Bag bakery sales and a junior department store offering the following:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Shopping Bag—California Ave. & San Bernardino Freeway, West Covina, Calif.

Summary: A Desirable First-rate Store in An Area Which Could Grow.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$70,000
Sales Floor	20,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	10
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Good

This is a really big store and brand new. Located in a West Covina shopping center which is close to another shopping center occupied by a McDaniel store and an independent market.

The new big Shopping Bags are laid out much like Von's stores with the addition of the junior department store in one corner. This offers the following:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Also liquor store, bakery float and plant bar.

Shopping Bag—Glendora and Amar, Puente, Calif.

Summary: The Store is Desirable and First-rate in a Highway Location Where There is Room For Growth.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	18,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	7
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Good

There is a Market Basket nearby with equal facilities but doubtless there will be room for both stores.

Included in the facilities available are:

Large Liquor Department
Shopping Bag bakery float
Magazines
Tube Tester
Phonograph Records
Film

A junior department store occupies about 3000 sq. ft. of the selling floor and carries:

Housewares
Stationery
Soft Goods
Toys
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Shopping Bag—Orangethorpe & Brookhurst, Fullerton, Calif.

Summary: This is a Desirable, Large Store Apparently Obtaining Good Results. Classed as First-rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$60,000
Sales Floor	21,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

Located in a large neighborhood shopping district, the store is laid out similarly to the newer type Von's. It appears to have a satisfactory hold on the local trade and to be making a success.

Included in the operation are approximately 3,000 sq. ft. for a junior department store and all of the following are carried:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods

Also liquor store and bakery sales.

Shopping Bag—Whittier Blvd. & Laurel, Whittier, Calif.

Summary: Another Desirable First Rate Store With Impressive Extra Departments.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$85,000
Sales Floor	20,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	10
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

This location puts the store within competitive distance of a Market Basket, an Alpha Beta and a Von's. There seems to be no question that Shopping Bag is holding its own or better.

The layout here is like most of the new Shopping Bag and Von stores, again with the use of about 3,500 sq. ft. for junior department store goods. The following merchandise is offered:

Housewares
Hardware
Glassware
Stationery
Soft Goods
Beauty & Health Aids
Film
Key Making
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Hosiery
Women's Wear
Men's Wear
Sporting Goods
Shoes
Garden Tools
Plumbing Supplies

Also large liquor store, Shopping Bag bakery sales and plant bar.

Alexander—Orange and Wilson, Glendale, Calif.

Summary: A Second Rate Store Because it is Getting Old and Would be Vulnerable to Any Additional Competition.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	10,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Fair
Perishable Freshness—	Good

There is a Ralph's adjoining on the other side of the parking lot which greatly outreaches this store. It is feared that anything more might give this store definite trouble.

One unusual arrangement here and of questionable desirability is the meat which is carried in floor cases in the center of the store rather than along the wall. Stocking would seem difficult.

Other extra features are:

Van DeKamp Float
Snack Bar
Housewares
Stationery
Magazines

Alexander—Foothill & Georgian, La Canada, Calif.

Summary: This is a Bright New Store, First Rate In Every Way, Although it Does Overlap the Shopping Bag ½ Mile Away.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	14,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

This store, laid out much like the Von's, is physically the best Alexander seen but unfortunately the La Canada Shopping Bag is quite close by and is taking out about $50,000 from this area.

Extra features of this store are as follows:

Van DeKamp Bakery Sales
Plant Bar
Soda Fountain
Housewares
Plastics
Stationery
Film
Glassware
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Hosiery

Alexander—Magnolia and First, Burbank, Calif.

Summary: This is a First Rate Successful Looking Store in the Central Business District.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$75,000
Sales Floor	12,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	10
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Good

Competition is several blocks away consisting of a Ralph's.

Once again the layout resembles that of a modern Von's Market. In this instance a soda fountain constitutes an added feature but there is no liquor store. Other features include:

Van DeKamp Sales Float
Small Fish Case
Housewares
Stationery
Magazines
Pet Supplies
Hosiery

Alexander—Victory Blvd. & Laurel Canyon, Van Nuys, Calif.

Summary: This is Classed as a First Rate Store on the Grounds of an Apparent Successful Operation in Spite of a Relatively Unimpressive Appearance.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$65,000
Sales Floor	16,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	12
Grocery Housekeeping—	Fair
Perishable Freshness—	Good

The location is next to a shopping center in which both McDaniel and Thriftimart are present. However, neither seem to be causing Alexander any particular trouble. As stated above, the store is not impressive; at least needs paint and new lighting.

The layout here is practically identical with Von's larger stores although some meat is carried across the aisle from the regular self service meat department. Extra features include:

Van DeKamp Bakery Sales
Small Fish Case
Housewares
Stationery
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records

Alexander—Vermont & 30th Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This is Definitely a Second-rate Store. It has an Odd Layout and Some of the Fixtures Are Not Matched.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	9,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	6
Grocery Housekeeping—	Good
Perishable Freshness—	Excellent

The peculiar arrangement here finds frozen food in the floats on the sales floor and at a dislocated point in the wall fixturing. On the other hand the fresh meat is found in cases on the sales floor rather than on the wall. Trade appears to be heavily Negro and Oriental. Perhaps this is where the old fixtures go.

Extra features include only the following:

Van DeKamp Bakery Shelving
Housewares
Stationery
Toys
Magazines

Alexander—West Washington & Westview, Los Angeles, Calif.

Summary: This Store Would be Desirable Only as Part of a Package Since it is Rather Cluttered and Needs Re-working. Classed as Second Rate.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$35,000
Sales Floor	9,500 sq. ft.
Checklanes	5
Grocery Housekeeping—	Fair
Perishable Freshness—	Good

There is nothing especially outstanding about the store. The arrangement is definitely rather odd since part of the grocery floats are on a line with the check outs and the balance are at right angles.

Among the extra features offered are:

Van DeKamp Bakery Sales
Lunch Counter & Soda Fountain
Housewares
Toys
Hosiery

Alexander—Azusa and Gladstone, Azusa, Calif.

Summary: This is a First-rate Desirable Store in Spite of the Volume Which is Not Quite Up to the Size of the Store.

Estimated Weekly Sales	$40,000
Sales Floor	20,000 sq. ft.
Checklanes	8
Grocery Housekeeping—	Excellent
Perishable Freshness—	Good

The Covina Shopping Bag is quite close and one or the other may suffer in the long run.

This store is laid out in a plan similar to the newer Von's and in addition has the low back frozen food cases which are definitely attractive.

Other extra features include:

Van DeKamp Bakery Sales
Small Fish Case
Ice Cream Counter
Housewares
Glassware
Stationery
Film
Toys
Magazines
Phonograph Records
Pet Supplies
Greeting Cards

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT AS

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Civil Action No. 336–60–WM

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,

v.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, Defendants.

PLAINTIFF'S ANSWERS TO SUPPLEMENTAL INTERROGATORIES 6A THROUGH 6D OF DEFENDANT VON'S GROCERY COMPANY

The following are answers to Supplemental Interrogatories 6A through 6D, served by defendant Von's Grocery Company herein. The Government asserts that such answers are served in advance of pre-trial discovery and prior to the formulation of issues in a pre-trial order. It is, therefore, clear that such answers cannot be considered final and may be modified as a result of further discovery and investigation.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6A:

> "Is plaintiff able to identify by name and business address any of the 'smaller sellers' referred to in paragraph 13(d) of the complaint?"

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6A:

Yes.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6B:

> "If the answer to subdivision A is in the affirmative, state the name and business address of each such 'smaller seller' that plaintiff can identify."

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6B:

All names and addresses listed in the appendix attached hereto, with the exception of stores operated by defendant herein.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6C:

> "Is plaintiff able to identify by name and business address any of the 'independent retailers' referred to in paragraph 13(e) of the complaint?"

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6C:

Yes.

Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6D:

> "If the answer to subdivision C is in the affirmative, state the name and business address of each such "independent retailer' that plaintiff can identify."

Answer to Supplemental Interrogatory No. 6D:

All names and addresses listed in answer to Interrogatory No. 6B, except stores operated by chains. To the best of plaintiff's knowledge, such chains include, but are not necessarily limited to, the following:

Alexander's Markets
Alpha Beta Markets
Better Food Markets

President's Summary of 1962

Contained in this Annual Report are facts and figures demonstrating that the 1962 fiscal year ending September 1, 1962, was undoubtedly one of the finest in Certified's history. For confirmation, there is the report on dollar volume of $299,664,945, an increase of approximately $6 million over 1961. This amount, when combined with the sales of Spartan Grocers, Inc., produced a total volume of over $350 million. Also standing out as strong proof of 1962's success are the patronage dividends declared by your Board of Directors: 1.25% on dry grocery warehouse purchases, 2% on drop shipment purchases, 2.50% on frozen food purchases, 1.30% on health and beauty aids purchases, 1% on delicatessen purchases, and 5.25% on members' purchases of coffee and cello products packed in Certified's own processing plant. This processing plant dividend is in addition to the regular dry grocery warehouse dividend also paid on purchases of coffee and cello packed beans, rice and popcorn produced by Certified.

Last year in my Annual Report, I stated that, due to the sound moves made by the Board of Directors to improve our capital structure, your company's financial position was the best it had enjoyed for years. This continued financial strength has resulted in less borrowing by Certified and thus less interest costs, contributing greatly to the improved patronage dividends returned to the members for the past year; and also paves the way for sound future expansion and development.

Results of the 1962 fiscal year as portrayed in this Annual Report are a testimonial to the loyal, capable people in our warehouses and offices who made this fine report possible. Our streamlined warehouse, our modern equipment, our carefully selected inventory are but tools which are used through the intelligent, loyal efforts of many people to produce the results represented here.

At Certified, we have always taken great care in the selection of our personnel and in their training, and through personal recognition have developed an esprit de corps in our work force which has been noted and envied by many visitors from the outside. This recognition of our people takes many forms. A junior management program consisting of supervisory and employee committees, serves as a channel for communication to and from employees, and provides both employees and supervisors with an opportunity to offer constructive criticism and suggestions regarding operating procedures and policies. Employees completing five-year increments of service receive service pins at monthly luncheons held with the recipients by the officers of the company. Employees with 25 years or more of service belong to a Quarter Century Club. Members of this club, who now total more than 40, receive a handsome plaque from the company, a special identification card, and other forms of recognition. A fine employee benefit program, social functions, and other special employee services performed through our Personnel Department contribute to the general loyalty and dedication to service which mark a Certified employee.

Without the efforts and understanding of our employees, what we have accomplished during this past year in the way of cost control and improved efficiency would not have been possible. We faced the beginning of the 1962 fiscal year with several major obstacles, including tax increases and higher industry-wide-negotiated labor costs totaling more than $550,000. To offset these increased costs we relied mainly on an aggressive cost-control program, which assigned operating budgets to each office and division, and a projected increase in volume. We also concentrated on improving operating procedures. Studies are constantly being made in our warehousing and transportation divisions toward the utilization of better equipment and more productive methods. Palletized loading is now being employed for some deliveries and undoubtedly will be expanded in the future.

Research is being conducted constantly in our data processing division to find better equipment and better systems for office functions and for determining possible additional services to the members. A recent example of our progress in this field was the installation of two 1401 IBM computers with printing speeds of 600 lines per minute for each machine, which took the place of five 407 tabulating machines, each with a printing speed of 150 lines per minute. Current research is leading the way for future replacement of our two Electrodata computers with faster and more flexible computers. Studies are also under way in other areas, such as fresh meats, produce, ice cream, retail computer service, etc., where Certified possibly can be of benefit to its member accounts. Developments on a fresh meat operation probably can be expected during this current fiscal year. Progress is also anticipated in the area of procuring store equipment for qualified members through the Grocers Equipment Company, now being established by Certified.

I am extremely grateful for the splendid support given to Certified by your Board of Directors. They devote many hours of their own time to Certified each month, and it is to their credit that without exception they view the problems to be solved from the standpoint of what is best for Certified, with no thought of individual gain. This is a well rounded Board, representing all segments of Certified membership. I wish to thank them here for their assistance and generous donation of their time.

Nor can we overlook the important role played in our success by our suppliers, the many fine firms from whom we buy merchandise and with whom we enjoy a mutual respect. Their coordinated activity and help have been invaluable to us.

Finally, I wish to express my thanks to the members for their support and cooperation. A few members tend to view Certified as just another supplier. But most members seem to realize that they are Certified. The members are the only stockholders; through their Board of Directors they establish operating policies, and they are the only ones to receive the patronage dividends made possible through the successful operation of the company. The importance of all-out member support cannot be ignored. It is essential to the future successful operation of Certified Grocers, and with it we can face the future with confidence.

Review of Operations

LOOKING BACK

Surpassing the accomplishments of the "banner year", 1961, was a Herculean task, but headquarters did just that in 1962 [illegible]ding an all time high in dollar volum[illegible] a $12 million climb in warehouse sales, Certified shipped 674,746 tons to member stores. Sound management policy, a strict cost control budget program, improved warehouse and office mechanization, greater employee efficiency and splendid member cooperation all contributed to greater returns. Although industry-wide negotiations increased labor costs, actual dollar decreases in operating costs were realized in administrative areas. In addition to higher returns, Certified offered members the widest selection of merchandise and enjoyed the lowest out of stock condition of any warehouse of its kind.

DRY GROCERY

Tonnage shipped from Eastern Avenue and San Fernando was up about 16,000 tons, for a total of more than one-half million tons. Inching steadily toward the goal of 16 turns a year, the dry grocery warehouse turnover rate was 15.39, and this figure continues to steadily improve. An $8 million increase brought net dry grocery sales to $194,297,892 for the fiscal year. In ratio to sales, warehouse expenses were reduced. Members earned a 1.25% patronage dividend, compared to 1.21% the previous year.

FROZEN FOOD

Shipping nearly 100,000 tons, the Frozen Food Division increased sales to $23,967,339. Tonnage shipped increased about eight per cent over the previous year. The patronage dividend was 2.50%, better by .25 than in 1961.

DELICATESSEN

Sixteen per cent more merchandise was moved out of Certified's delicatessen warehouse, showing the continued growth of this division. Delicatessen sales amounted to $16,382,135. The patronage dividend was improved from .80% in 1961 to 1.00% for 1962.

NON-FOODS

Sales climbed to $12,151,468, with volume growing to 15,489 tons. New programs on lamps, toys, brooms and mops gave the membership wider merchandising opportunities. Competitive price adjustments early in the year left a smaller operating margin, which lowered the Health and Beauty Aids' dividend to 1.30%. However, on the current operating basis, a higher dividend is expected in the next fiscal year.

PROCESSING PLANT

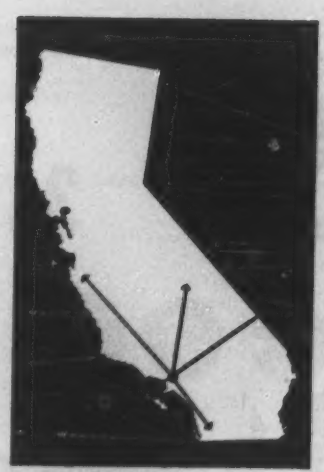
The first patronage dividend was paid on Certified-packed coffee, beans, rice and popcorn. The Board of Directors made this policy effective in January, so the 5.25% dividend covers a 35-week period. This is in addition to 1.25% paid on the same products as dry grocery purchases and the 2% spoils allowance on Certified-packed cello products.



SPRINGFIELD

About four million cases of Springfield merchandise were purchased by members, who may now select from among 350 items in dry grocery, frozen food or delicatessen. Television spot commercials, free display kits, free ad mats and ad cart signs support the Springfield program.

SERVICES

Drop shipment volume declined about $6 million, but headquarters still processed invoices totaling over $50 million and returned a 2% dividend to members. The advertising department handled 100,000 tear sheets for advertising members and made payments to them on more than 2,000 items. New special handling of vacuum coffee allowances benefited retailers. Additional field men in specific divisions (dry grocery, frozen food, delicatessen and the processing plant) offered more headquarters assistance to members, supplementing the member services department's activities. Member Purchase Analyses were available from the market research department. Members considered Certified's first membership conference at Coronado such a success, that a second one will be held early in 1963, adding another means of communication to the weekly Purchasing Guide, letters from the president, special mailings, the Co-operator, the annual report and special divisional brochures. Also available to members is a new "bag stuffer" telling customers about the independent market's buying and selling power through his membership in the world's largest retailer-owned food wholesaler.

Distribution of the Dollar

AFTER PAYMENT FOR MERCHANDISE, CERTIFIED'S REVENUE DOLLAR WAS DIVIDED AS FOLLOWS:

WAGES & EMPLOYEE BENEFITS ..... 47.1¢

OTHER EXPENSES
(TAXES, DEPRECIATION, MAINTENANCE, ETC.) ..... 16.8¢

DECLARED SURPLUS ..... 00.1¢

Turning over warehouse stock [illegible] 16 times a year results in an around-the calendar buying and selling proceed that totals about $300 million in sales and other income. By the time this income reinvested in more merchandise, relatively few dollars remain. This year, less than $18 million were available for anything other than the buying of inventory. What happens to these dollars? The [illegible] at left show exactly what share of the dollar goes where. Requiring only [illegible] 64 cents of the dollar for operating [illegible] Certified returned 36 cents to the [illegible] bership. About one mill, actually 13.6 of a penny, is retained as surplus for the fiscal year. In actual dollars, this is distribution:

Returns to Members....$	6,463,317
Wages and Employee Benefits	8,450,120
Other Expenses	3,016,907
Declared Surplus	23,500
TOTAL	$17,947,720

These returns show the advantage of retailer-ownership. It is what headquarters calls the R. O. Factor. As members of the world's largest retailer-owned wholesaler, members know they are receiving full benefits and that every penny is accounted for. .

3. The California Franchise Tax Board issued proposed additional tax assessments covering the years ended October 31, 1953 to October 31, 1957, aggregating $484,087.25 plus interest. The assessments arise from the proposed disallowance of interest on members' deposits and patronage dividends paid to members as deductions from taxable income. The Revenue and Taxation Code was changed to permit the deduction of patronage dividends for years beginning after December 31, 1957. It is possible that additional assessments might be proposed for the intervening period. Although the State Board of Equalization issued an opinion and order dated September 20, 1962 which rejected the proposed assessments, the Franchise Tax Board has petitioned for a rehearing.

It is the belief of management and of company counsel that the proposed assessments are without merit and can probably be successfully [illegible]

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Civil No. 336-60-CC

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,

v.

VON'S GROCERY CO. AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, Defendants.

DEFENDANT'S ANSWER TO PLAINTIFF'S INTERROGATORY NO. 6 AND EXHIBITS D, E, AND G THERETO

* * * * * *

Shopping Bag and, as to the stores listed in paragraphs 1 to 5 inclusive above, surveys conducted in December 1959 by Facts Consolidated for the law firm of O'Melveny & Myers. The report covering these surveys will be made available to plaintiff for inspection and copying prior to trial when similar surveys which have been or are being made for plaintiff are made available to defendant for inspection and copying. See also Exhibit E to the Answer to Interrogatory No. 6.

Interrogatory No. 6:

By agreement with counsel for plaintiff, Interrogatory No. 6 has been amended to read as follows:

List the name and address of every store operated or planned by the Combined Companies on April 1, 1960. As to each such store, supply the following information:

A. List the name and address of every other store which is considered a competitor. As to each such store, supply the following information:

(1) The approximate distance between such store and the store operated by the Combined Companies.

(2) Whether such competitor is larger or smaller in size than the store operated by the Combined Companies.

(3) State whether such competitor is approximately the same age as, older than, or newer than the store operated by the Combined Companies.

(4) Set forth the basis upon which such stores are classed as competitive stores and list every document which refers or relates in any way to the competition between Von's and Shopping Bag stores and other stores.

B. Set forth in general terms the geographical limits of the trade area served by the store.

Answer to Interrogatory No. 6:

In the table attached as Exhibit D are set forth the names and addresses and numbers of the respective Von's stores operating on April 1, 1960 and such information as is available with respect to geographic trading area and names and addresses of and information concerning competitors in the area. The same information as to each Shopping Bag store which was operating on April 1, 1960 and as to its competitors is set forth on Exhibit E. It should be noted t at drug stores, liquor stores, delicatessens, bakeries and other specialty stores which may exist in the areas served by the Von's-Shopping Bag stores are not listed on Exhibits D and E, although such specialty stores, of course, do compete for the customer dollar in the sale of some of the items which are sold by the Von's-Shopping Bag stores.

Exhibit F lists the addresses of each store planned by the combined companies on April 1, 1960, and, insofar as the same is available, data with respect to competing stores in the areas which will be served by the planned stores. As to these prospective stores (other than No. 6 which opened June 23, 1960 and No. 53 which opened May 12, 1960) the information as to possible competitors is based on the opinion of officers of the company, but, of course, the actual competitive situation will not be known until the stores have been opened.

The bases for definition of the geographic trading area and for the listing of competitors (which are listed on said Exhibits D and E in order of rank) are the opinions of the respective Von's-Shopping Bag store managers and assistant managers. Nevertheless, there are a number of documents or surveys (other than surveys or documents prepared in connection with the pending proceedings) in the possession of defendant which bear upon the question of geographic trading areas and competitors therein, and these documents and surveys are listed on Exhibit G, which is attached hereto. These are all of the documents and surveys which defendant has thus far found in its files, but if additional such surveys are located, plaintiff will be apprised thereof and be given an opportunity to examine and copy the same.

It should also be noted that, with respect to such surveys, the date thereof is of importance, as the surveys may fail to show the existence of competitors who have located in the geographic trading areas subsequent to the date of the surveys. Exhibit G also furnishes such additional information with respect to said surveys as is called for by Interrogatories Nos. 5 and 6.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS

March 17, 1960

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of stockholders of Von's Grocery Co. will be held he office of the Company in Los Angeles, California, at 3750 West Santa Barbara Avenue, Los eles, California, on Thursday, March 17, 1960, at 2:00 o'clock P.M., for the purpose of electing n directors, and transacting such other business as may properly come before the meeting.

Stockholders of record on the books of the Company at the close of business on February 5, 1960, be entitled to vote at the meeting.

By order of the Board of Directors.

EDWARD C. FREUTEL, JR., Secretary

The Annual Meeting will follow immediately after adjournment of the Special Meeting held to ove the merger.

IF YOU CANNOT BE PRESENT IN PERSON AT THESE MEETINGS, PLEASE SIGN AND E THE ENCLOSED PROXY AND RETURN IT TO THE CORPORATION IN THE SELF-RESSED, POSTAGE PREPAID ENVELOPE ENCLOSED FOR THAT PURPOSE.

This proxy is solicited by the Management of the Company.

PURPOSE OF THE MEETING

The special meeting of stockholders to be held on March 17, 1960 has been called to consider and upon the approval of the Agreement of Merger dated January 25, 1960 providing for the merger of pping Bag Food Stores, a California corporation ("Shopping Bag"), into Von's Grocery Co., a aware corporation ("Von's"). The Agreement of Merger, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit A his Proxy Statement, was approved by the Boards of Directors of both companies at meetings held uary 25, 1960, and has been executed by both companies subject to the approval of their respective eholders. Approval of the Agreement of Merger requires the affirmative vote of the holders of two- is of the issued and outstanding shares of each class of stock of each corporation.

ADVANTAGES OF THE PROPOSED MERGER

The management of each company believes that the proposed merger will have substantial advantages benefits for both companies and for their respective stockholders. Of immediate interest to stock- lers is the fact that, by increasing the number of outstanding shares and the number of public kholders, the merger will have the effect of broadening the market for the shares of stock of the viving corporation, thus making the stock less likely to be subject to price fluctuations, and offering opportunity of listing the stock on a national securities exchange.

From a financial point of view, the merged companies will be in a better position to obtain either ity or debt financing, if necessary, on terms more favorable than either one of them could expect to otiate alone.

From a business point of view, the following advantages and economies are expected to accrue to combined companies as a result of the merger:

(a) Overhead, general and administrative expenses are expected to be reduced as a result of the elimination of duplication.

(b) Total advertising expenses are expected to be substantially reduced, since duplication will be avoided, and the advertising campaigns of the combined companies can be more economically and effectively carried out.

(c) It will be possible as a result of the merger to combine certain office and warehouse facilities, with a resulting saving in rent, taxes and related expenses.

(d) More efficient utilization of warehousing and trucking facilities is expected as a result of the merger, with related economies in the operation of warehouses and rolling stock, more rapid distribution from warehouses to retail outlets, greater product diversification and resulting better service to customers.

(e) The combined companies will be able to share the specialized management abilities which each of them now possesses, through the pooling of executive talent.

(f) The inventory of the combined companies will be substantially lower than the aggregate of their separate inventories.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Your Board of Directors is unanimously of the opinion that the proposed merger is desirable and its terms are fair and equitable and recommends that the stockholders vote in favor of the merger.

MATERIAL FEATURES OF THE AGREEMENT OF MERGER

The material features of the Agreement of Merger are as follows:

1. Shopping Bag will be merged into Von's. The separate corporate existence of Shopping Bag cease and Von's will remain as the surviving corporation.

Dissenting shares are which were held of record on February 5, 1960, the record date for the meeting, by any holder who vote such shares in favor of the merger at the special stockholders' meeting and who has demanded t corporation purchase such shares at their fair market value, and who has submitted the cer senting such shares for endorsement as dissenting shares. The compensation of dissenting stockers is dealt with in sections 4300 through 4318 of the California Corporations Code, to which rence is made for the rights of dissenting stockholders and the procedures to be followed.

Section 262 of the Delaware General Corporation Law affords to stockholders of Von's who object e merger the right to payment in cash of the value of their stock on the date of the recording of the ement of Merger in New Castle County, Delaware, exclusive of any element of value arising from the ctation of the proposed merger. In order to be entitled to such right, a stockholder of Von's must file itten objection to the merger with the company before the taking of the vote on the merger and must ote his shares in favor of the merger. Von's will notify by registered mail any stockholder who files an objection of the filing and recording of the merger agreement within ten days after such filing and rding. An objecting stockholder who wishes to perfect his rights must, within twenty days after the of mailing such notice, demand payment for his stock from Von's in writing. If the parties cannot e on the value of the shares either party may institute appraisal proceedings, in accordance with the isions of Section 262 of the Delaware General Corporation Law.

CONVERSION OF SECURITIES ON MERGER

Each share of Common Stock and each share of Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag outstanding e effective date of the merger will be converted into one share of Common Stock of Von's. No change e made in Von's shares outstanding as of the effective date of the merger, which will continue as s of Von's.

After the effective date of the merger, holders of Shopping Bag Common Stock certificates and B Common Stock certificates may exchange them for certificates for Common Stock of Von's on asis of one share of Von's for each share of Common Stock of Shopping Bag and one share of for each share of Class B Common Stock of Shopping Bag. Until so surrendered, each such nding Shopping Bag certificate shall be deemed, for all corporate purposes other than the payment idends, to evidence ownership of a like number of shares of Common Stock of Von's. Unless and ny such outstanding Shopping Bag certificates shall be so surrendered, no dividend payable to olders of record of Common Stock of Von's as of any date subsequent to the effective date of the r shall be paid to the holders of outstanding Shopping Bag certificates, but upon surrender of any outstanding Shopping Bag certificates for exchange there shall be paid to the record holders of the icates of the Common Stock of Von's into which such Shopping Bag shares are converted the total nt of dividends which would have been paid to the holder of such certificates had they been nding continuously since the effective date of the merger.

A five-year summary of earnings of each company is contained in the financial statements inc herein. The accountants' opinions and the notes to financial statements, which set forth in detail basis on which earnings were calculated, should be read in conjunction with the foregoing tabulation

As a result of an industry-wide strike in the Southern California area by members of certain l of the Retail Clerks Union, 21 out of 27 of Von's stores were closed and 29 out of 36 of Shopping B stores were closed from January 2, 1959 through January 28, 1959. This event had an adverse e on the sales and earnings of both companies for the current year.

DIVIDENDS

Both companies have long followed a policy of financing the major cost of expansion and imp ments from retained earnings and as a consequence earnings have been used for equipping and establi new stores and enlarging and improving existing facilities. Nevertheless, quarterly cash dividends been paid on the stock of Von's for each quarter since the last quarter of 1954, and annual cash divi were paid in 1951, 1952 and 1953. Dividends have been paid (adjusted on the basis of 1,871,480 s outstanding) in the periods indicated as follows:

1954	.016¢ per share
1955	.064¢ per share
1956	.064¢ per share
1957	.064¢ per share
1958	.064¢ per share
1959	.390¢ per share

Because of its policy of using retained earnings for expansion, dividends were not paid o outstanding stock of Shopping Bag prior to 1956. Since that date, cash dividends have been paid o Common Stock but not on the Class B Common Stock. The following table shows the amount of cash dividends actually paid on the Common Stock, and the amount of such dividends comput forma on the basis of the average total number of shares (including shares of Class B Common S outstanding in each year, after adjustment for the stock split in 1956 and the stock dividend in 19

1958	.58¢ per share	.152¢ per share
1959	.58¢ per share	.181¢ per share

The Board of Directors of Von's in October of 1958 declared its intention to pay cash dividends in future on a quarterly basis and to distribute stock dividends annually. This statement of policy, wever, is not to be taken as a representation or assurance that dividends either in cash or in stock will paid in the future at any particular time or in any particular manner or amount. The payment of ure dividends, if any, will necessarily depend on the earnings and the financial position of the mbined companies following the merger, and upon other factors.

ORGANIZATION OF VON'S AS THE SURVIVING CORPORATION

On the effective date of the merger of Shopping Bag into Von's, all the rights, privileges, powers, nchises and other property of Shopping Bag will become the property of Von's as the surviving rporation and Von's will assume all liabilities of Shopping Bag.

The following table shows the capitalization of Von's and Shopping Bag, and the pro forma pitalization of the merged companies, as of January 3, 1960:

BUSINESS AND PROPERTIES OF VON'S AS THE SURVIVING CORPORATION

As previously noted, after consummation of the merger, the assets, liabilities, business and properties th of the companies will be owned by Von's, the surviving corporation. A description of the nt activities and properties of Von's and Shopping Bag follows:

Von's was incorporated in Delaware on October 14, 1958 and on November 3, 1958 took the entire operations of a California corporation of the same name which was the successor of the original partnership from which Von's developed. The partnership started business in 1932 under the name Von's Grocery Co. as a grocery department in a single store. From this beginning Von's has grown steadily and it now operates 28 complete supermarkets of which 27 are located in Los Angeles County and one in adjoining Orange County.

All of Von's supermarkets are of the self-service, cash and carry type and include departments selling groceries, bakery products, meats, fresh fruits and vegetables, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, drug sundries and certain other non-food items. In 22 stores the company operates a department handling alcoholic beverages. All departments are owned and operated by the company except that each market contains a sweet goods bakery department operated by Van de Kamp's Holland Dutch Bakeries Division of General Baking Co.

For many years Von's has had a continuous program for the development and modernization of its markets. Within the past five years, 11 new supermarkets have been opened and two small markets have been closed. Von's intends to continue its modernization, improvement and expansion program in its present marketing area.

All of Von's supermarkets are held under leases, of which two expire in 1960 and the remainder expire at various times from 1964 through 1985. Ten of the store leases provide for a fixed rental only, three provide for a rental based on a percentage of gross sales only, and fifteen provide for minimum rentals against a percentage of gross sales.

Von's owns and operates a modern distribution center as well as a delicatessen kitchen at 2 South Garfield Boulevard in Los Angeles in a 216,000 square foot building located on a parcel of approximately twenty acres in area. The distribution center provides facilities for warehousing and distributing groceries, drug sundries, fresh fruits and vegetables and products prepared in the delicatessen kitchen. Von's owns and operates approximately thirty-three tractors and thirty-nine trailers which uses for transporting merchandise.

The offices of Von's are located at 3750 West Santa Barbara Avenue in Los Angeles in a two-story building containing approximately 23,000 square feet which is held under lease.

The office building and ten of the stores are leased by Von's from Von's Property Co. and Von's Investment Company, landholding corporations owned and controlled by members of the Von der Ahe family.

On January 31, 1960 one of Von's supermarkets located in Van Nuys was destroyed by fire. The entire loss, including Von's inventory and fixtures located in the building, was adequately covered by insurance. A temporary replacement building is presently being erected on a portion of the parking lot and is expected to be open for business about March 15, 1960. A permanent new store building on the premises is expected to be completed in about eight months.

Employee Relations:

Von's employs approximately 2,150 people. All hourly employees in the markets and in the distribution center are represented by labor unions with which the company has had satisfactory relations. Union contracts have been negotiated on an industry-wide basis by Food Employers Council, Inc. representing the market operators. The present contract with the Retail Clerks Union representing the majority of store employees expires early in 1964.

Restricted Stock Option Plan:

In October of 1958 Von's adopted a Restricted Stock Option Plan providing for the issuance to officers and other key employees of the company of "restricted stock options" (as defined in Section 421 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) entitling such employees to acquire shares of the common mon Stock at not less than 95% of the market price on the date of the grant of the option. The authorizes the granting of options with respect to an aggregate of 180,000 shares subject to adjust- to protect against dilution in the event of occurrence of certain changes in the capitalization of the pany. The Plan provides that the aggregate number of shares for which options may be granted to les T., Theodore A., Wilfred L. and Walter R. Von der Ahe individually or as a group shall not d 60,000 shares. As of the date of this proxy statement, no options have been granted under the

At the time of its organization in 1933 Shopping Bag acquired as a going concern all of the business ssets of a partnership consisting of W. R. Hayden and W. D. Rorex. It was incorporated under the "The Shopping Bag Market" and in 1947 its name was changed to "Shopping Bag Food Stores." plan of business followed by Shopping Bag since its inception has always involved the operation of ervice, cash and carry stores.

Shopping Bag presently operates 38 supermarkets in California, 34 in Los Angeles County, San Bernardino County and 2 in Orange County. All stores handle complete lines of groceries, , bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen items, frozen foods, fresh fruits and vegetables, household , drug sundries and alcoholic beverages. During the past five years the company has opened ew stores and has sold 4 stores.

Shopping Bag's general offices and principal warehouse are located at 10150 Lower Azusa Road, onte, California. A central bakery and delicatessen kitchen are also operated at this location.

To facilitate deliveries of products to its stores from its warehouse and central baking and delicatessen en, Shopping Bag owns and operates a fleet of trucks, trailers and automobiles comprising about nits in all.

It has been the policy of Shopping Bag to limit its investment in fixed assets in the belief that its al may be more profitably employed in store operations. In accordance with this policy all of its s are leased. The company's general offices and warehouse on 10150 Lower Azusa Road in El e, and its central bakery, delicatessen kitchen, garage and maintenance facilities at that location wned in fee.

Rentals called for by store leases are of three types: a fixed sum, a fixed sum plus a specified per- of gross sales and the greater of a fixed sum or specified percent of gross sales. Fifteen stores are ted under leases of the first type; two under the second and twenty-one under the third type of Eight of Shopping Bag's stores are leased from Shopping Bag Properties, a corporation owned and olled by members of the Hayden family, and three such stores are leased from W. R. Hayden, W. D. Rorex and Mrs. Mary K. Koch who own them as tenants in common.

oyee Relations:

Shopping Bag employs approximately 2,250 people. All hourly employees in the markets and in the ouse operations are represented by labor unions with which Shopping Bag has had satisfactory ons. Union contracts have been negotiated on an industry-wide basis by Food Employers Council epresenting the market operators. The present contract with the Retail Clerks Union representing ority of store employees expires early in 1964.

petition of Von's and Shopping Bag:

n the areas in which they operate both companies compete with two major national food chain organizations, numerous local chains and many large, independent food stores and smaller stores. is no substantial competition between Von's and Shopping Bag.

RELATIVE RIGHTS OF SHOPPING BAG STOCKHOLDERS

The rights of the holders of Common Stock and of Class B Common Stock of Shopping Ba identical except as follows: The Common Stock is entitled to non-cumulative cash dividends i amount of 70¢ per share per year before any cash dividends may be declared or paid on the C Common Stock. After payment of 70¢ per share on the Common Stock, cash dividends declared i year are payable to holders of Common Stock and Class B Common Stock, share and share alike. Class B Common Stock is convertible into Common Stock, share for share, at the option of the ho of the Class B Common Stock.

Approximately 61% of the Class B Common Stock is held by W. R. Hayden, the Presid Shopping Bag. In connection with a public offering of debentures and Common Stock in 1956, Hayden entered into an agreement with the underwriters which provided that he would not w their consent, except in the event of merger or consolidation, sell nor convert into Common Stock than 50% of his Class B Common Stock prior to June 1, 1961. This agreement, which is still in e will terminate in accordance with its terms upon the effective date of the merger. To date, Mr. Ha has not sold or converted any of the Class B Common Stock originally covered by the agreement.

NOTES TO FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

1. Merchandise Inventories:

All inventories are priced at the lower of cost or market. The retail inventory method is applied to groceries, produce, drugs, liquor and delicatessen items in retail market locations.

Merchandise inventories entering into the computation of cost of goods sold for the three years ended January 3, 1960 were:

January 3, 1960	$5,271,426
December 28, 1958	5,856,193
December 29, 1957	5,424,512
December 30, 1956	4,913,899

2. Properties:

The company maintains detailed property records including related depreciation. Useful life by categories follows:

	In Years
Store equipment:
Refrigeration systems, cash registers, counters, scales, etc.	8 to 10
Sundry equipment	3 to 5
Automotive equipment:
Trailers	10
Tractors, trucks, and automobiles	5
Buildings	30 and 40

Leasehold improvements are written off over the life of the applicable lease.

For both financial and tax basis reporting the sum of the years-digits method was adopted in 1954 for the purpose of computing depreciation. Where such method may not be applied either the straight line method or the 150% of declining balance method is used.

Upon the disposal of depreciable property, the accounts are relieved of the related costs and accumulated depreciation. The resulting gains and losses are reflected in the income statement.

Costs of major remodeling and improvements are capitalized. Repairs and maintenance are expensed as incurred.

3. Note Payable:

The note payable dated October 15, 1959 bears interest at the rate of 5¾% per annum and is payable in monthly installments of $1,976, including principal and interest. The note is secured by a deed of trust on land and building having a net carrying value at January 3, 1960 of $484,661.

4. Leases:

At January 3, 1960, the company had under lease 28 retail store premises, general office building and certain parking lots which with respect to annual minimum rentals are summarized as follows:

	Minimum Annual Rentals
Leases with:
Affiliates	$175,300
Others	480,237
	$655,537

Three of the store leases with affiliates contain no provision for minimum rentals.

The company has received proposed federal income tax deficiences for the years 1956 and 1957 which, in the opinion of management and company counsel, are without foundation.

$617,

On January 22, 1960 the $238,500 note was subordinated to a construction loan made by a bank to Thomp Borchard Ventura Corporation.

2. Merchandise Inventories:

Merchandise inventories are valued at the lower of cost or market. Inventories entering into the computatio cost of goods sold are as follows:

January 3, 1960	$7,372,994
December 31, 1958	7,676,575
December 31, 1957	7,150,246
January 1, 1957	5,486,604

3. Properties:

The depreciation policy of the company is to provide depreciation on a straight-line method based upo estimated life of the assets for book and statement purposes and upon an accelerated method where allow for tax purposes. The principal rates used during the three years ended January 3, 1960 were:

	In Years
Buildings	33⅓
Furniture and fixtures	10
Automobiles and trucks	4 and 6
Leasehold improvements (estimated useful life or period of lease)

Upon disposal of depreciable property, the accounts are relieved of the related costs and accumulated dep tion. The resulting gains and losses are reflected in the income statement.

Costs of major remodeling and improvements are capitalized. Repairs and maintenance are expensed as inc

4. Bank Note:

The bank note dated August 9, 1957, bearing interest at 5%, and having a balance at January 3, 19 $1,937,500.00 is payable in quarterly installments of $62,500, aggregating $250,000 annually. The agreement provides, among other covenants, that the company will maintain a net worth of not les $7,000,000 and net current assets of not less than $5,000,000.

5. Trust Deed Notes Payable:

	Due Within One Year	Due After One Year	Total
E. M. Sloan	$ 44,575		$ 44,57
The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States	72,014	$2,135,241	2,207,25
	$116,589	$2,135,241	$2,251,83

The note payable to E. M. Sloan was assumed in connection with the acquisition of unimproved land, which is adjacent to the office and warehouse property. The note bears interest at the rate of 5% per annum payable $450.00 or more per month, including principal and interest. It is intended that the note will be paid during the ensuing year.

The note payable to The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States having a balance at January 3, 1960 of $2,207,255 is secured by a trust deed on land and office, warehouse and central bakery buildings, and is payable in quarterly installments of $43,594, aggregating $174,376 annually in the years 1959-1978, inclusive, including interest at 5¼%. The note agreement provides, among other covenants, that the company maintain net current assets of not less than $4,000,000.

4½% Sinking Fund Convertible Subordinated Debentures:

Of the original $1,500,000 issue, $226,000 remained outstanding at January 3, 1960. Certain provisions of the 4½% sinking fund convertible subordinated debentures due May 15, 1971 are summarized as follows:

The indenture requires the company to provide for retirement of the debentures through a sinking fund. At January 3, 1960, the company had acquired sufficient debentures through conversion to satisfy the 1959 sinking fund requirement. The debentures are convertible at their principal amount into common stock of the company at any time at $12.00 per share of common stock until May 15, 1961, $14.00 until May 15, 1966, and $16.00 thereafter until maturity. The conversion price is subject to adjustment in certain cases, and at January 3, 1960 the current conversion price was $11.54 per share. The indenture places certain restrictions on the payment of cash dividends on the stock of the company and on the purchase or redemption of its stock.

Deferred Income Tax:

Deferred income taxes in the amount of $127,707 are taxes to be paid in the future as the result of the company using the sum of the years-digits method of depreciation for federal income tax purposes as compared to the straight-line method of depreciation used for book and report purposes.

Leases:

The approximate minimum annual rental liability on property and fixtures leased to the company at 38 locations is summarized by periods of expiration as follows:

	Leases	Amount
January 1, 1962 — December 31, 1966	13	$ 176,139
January 1, 1967 — December 31, 1976	19	447,101
January 1, 1977 — September 30, 1981	13	517,010
		$1,140,250

Commitments:

The company's federal income tax returns have been examined to December 31, 1958, and all additional assessments have been paid.

Dividends:

The common stock is entitled to cash dividends in the amount of 70 cents per share per year before any dividends may be declared or paid on Class B stock. After payment of 70 cents per share on common stock, dividends declared in any year are payable to holders of common stock and Class B stock, share and share alike. Each share of Class B stock is convertible into one share of common stock at the discretion of the holders of the Class B stock.

Restriction on the declaration of dividends are referred to in Note 6.

Dear Mr. Vaughn:

When discussing the theoretical draw and adjusted draw areas of Von's and Shopping Bag stores involved in Civil No. 336-60-CC, government counsel asked whether the barriers cited in Appendix I of the affidavit by Roy L. Bouque constitute complete barriers in developing the estimated population in the "adjusted draw areas".

In each section of Appendix I entitled "Adjusted Draw Area", there is a paragraph explaining the reasons for adjusting the theoretical draw area. Each barrier cited in these paragraphs constitutes a complete barrier in developing the estimated population counts, unless it is stated that it is a partial barrier. Examples of these exceptions appear on pages 28 and 67 of the affidavit.

Very truly yours, Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery

Summary of Motivation Research Study Conducted for The Shoppers Market in Norwalk

Practical Purposes of this Study

The primary purpose of this research was to investigate consumer attitudes toward the Shoppers Market in Norwalk in order to (1) more accurately determine the psychological picture which now exists in the consumers mind regarding this store and shopping center, and (2) to ascertain the ideal psychological picture which it is desirable to develop among these consumers.

The broad term "consumer attitudes" is here meant to include such elements as awareness and familiarity with the market, attitudes toward prices, customer service, variety and quality of merchandise, and any other factors which relate to consumer selection of a supermarket. Each item is considered with reference to competitive stores as well as the Shoppers Market.

The Method

The technique we have employed in making this survey is called motivation research. It is based on "depth" interviewing by trained interviewers. The respondents are encouraged to express their spontaneous attitudes and feelings in a free, conversational manner.

The interviewers were provided with a guide-list of relevant subjects or "areas" that were to be investigated. They bring up each aspect of the subject, giving the respondent every opportunity to "talk herself out". No predetermined questions were employed. The interviewers have been trained to draw forth all the respondent's own ideas without leading or influencing the replies, and to cover all points indicated.

Whenever spontaneous response on the part of the respondent ceases, the interviewer "probes" further. Through this "digging" he induces the respondent to talk further, to explain, to look beneath the surface, to re-examine.

When the interviews are completed, both surface and underlying attitudes and motivations have been thoroughly examined. The respondent generally reveals more than she is aware of, not only in what is said, but in what is not said as well. Reading "between the lines" in terms of known "laws" of human behavior is part of the analysis during these intensive interviews.

A good "depth" interview, in which close rapport has been established between interviewer and respondent, generally lasts twenty minutes to one hour. The respondent's remarks are noted verbatim in order to preserve the consumer's own language and wording as much as possible.

Samples of Respondents

A total of 240 respondents comprised the sample upon which this report is based. These respondents were selected at random within a one mile radius of each store. Because this was a random sample, included in it were individuals who do 100% of their shopping at the Shoppers Market, individuals who might be termed "multi-store" shoppers (in that they consistently shop at most of the stores in the area), individuals who do most of their shopping at markets other than Shoppers; individuals who have never shopped at Shoppers; and virtually all possible combinations of shopping preferences.

Survey Results

The results of our motivation research in the Norwalk area indicates that, in general, the Shoppers Market and shopping center have done a very notable job in satisfying the shopping requirements of a significantly large percentage of homemakers in this area. It is very rare, indeed, to find a market which satisfies so completely the shopping requirements of so many. Such verbal accolades as "It's the ideal shopping center", or "I have never shopped at a finer market", or "It is the friendly market in town", or "I can't think of a single thing that should be changed about the market which would further improve it" were bestowed upon the market by the majority of the consumers in our sample who make most of their purchases at Shoppers. Even many of the consumers who only occasionally shop at Shoppers displayed generally positive attitudes toward this market. These are people who, for one reason or another, find it more convenient to shop at one or more of the other markets in the area. In short, the psychic picture which now exists in the consumers mind regarding this store and shopping center is a very favorable one.

One of the basic reasons for this almost universal satisfaction among the Norwalk homemakers toward Shoppers is related to the unique degree of homogeneity of the socio-economic, age, and ethnic components of the Norwalk area. As a result of these homogeneous characteristics of the residents within the one mile radius of the market, it is not surprising that Shoppers has been able to capture so much of the total shopping volume in the area. This point becomes more understandable when one considers the fact that the area is not broken up into distinct socio-economic or racial districts or "islands", each with its own set of shopping preferences (as is the case in so many other Southern California communities). In such heterogeneous communities it is very difficult, if not impossible, for one market to be "all things to all people". Consequently, in such areas of mixed socio-economic and racial groups, one usually finds considerable variety in the types and sizes of markets which service the area. Such, of course, is very definitely not the case in the Norwalk area. Here we find a district which is almost completely dominated by the large supermarkets and shopping centers, and with very few "mamma and papa" markets. Additionally, we find that, in the main, these supermarkets are catering to a fairly homogeneous group of shoppers, and that which satisfies one customer will usually satisfy the other.

This suggests two things which are pertinent to the purpose of this research study. First, it suggests that up to the present time, Shoppers Market (by virtue of its variety of merchandise, its quality of produce and meat, its friendly shopping atmosphere, its customer service, and the various other factors which make for an effective market operation) has been highly effective in establishing a strong degree of customer loyalty with the major percentage of this homogeneous group of consumers within the area under investigation. Second, this observation, in combination with the fact that the shopping habits of the consumers in the area are very deeply ingrained, suggests that increased competition in the area would have a negligible effect on the shopping habits of consumers who are currently trading at Shoppers Market.

The Norwalk Homemakers

Based upon statistical averages, the typical Norwalk Homemaker is an American born woman in her early middle thirties. She is married and is the mother of 2.13 children. She spends on the average of $23.98/week at 1.4 supermarkets in the area. Although she is extremely budget and priceminded, in the strict sense of the word she cannot be classified as a true "price-shopper". She follows the ads in the paper quite religiously, but reads only the ads of the specific market where she is accustomed to shopping. She likes to keep herself well informed of which prices are lower when the time comes for actual buying so that she may plan her week-end shopping on the basis of the "specials" which are offered; she also likes to know the brands involved on week-end sales.

Through a process of trial and error, she has found the market or markets in her neighborhood which offer her (in her perception) the most compatible shopping environment. To this market she extends most of her shopping loyalty, even though another market in the area may occasionally offer lower week-end prices on specific items. She reasons that if she were to make the entire circuit of markets in the area in order to take advantage of their week-end "specials", her savings would be dissipated by the cost of increased gasoline consumption and the time lost; "anyway", she rationalizes, "the differences in 'special' prices among the various markets is not sufficiently great to justify such a shopping tour".

Advertising

In this area the principal medium of advertising for markets is newspapers. Of the two local papers, the strongest degree of preference was expressed by interviewees in favor of the Herald American for market advertising. (approximately 70% of the population follow the grocery ads quite consistently from week to week. Of this group, 90% read the ads in the Herald American, while only 10% follow the ads in the Norwalk Advertiser). This preference for the Herald American over the Norwalk Advertiser is related to the fact that these people, as was the case with the Santa Monica respondents, feel that it is a "newspaper" and not merely a "throwaway".

The price consciousness of the Norwalk homemaker, as indicated in an earlier section of this report, is extremely high. This tends to negate the advisability of switching to a completely institutional type of campaign. However, we do feel that a properly handled semi-institutional type of advertisement could contribute to increased customer volume.

Since shoppers in this area tend to choose one market at which they do virtually all of their shopping, they develop strong habits and feelings of loyalty toward this store. They are as vitally interested in quality of merchandise and customer service as they are in price. The establishment of a semi-institutional type of advertising would further fortify this perception among loyal Shoppers customers. It would also tend to develop a more clear cut and positive personality for the market among these customers who now rarely or never shop at Shoppers, but who do read Shoppers ads occasionally. Since price advertisements are read by the Norwalk shopper primarily for the convenience of knowing what is on special at her own market, and price ads for other markets are read mostly for the sake of mere comparison; a semi-institutional ad which established Shoppers as a market where low prices, quality products and service are combined might more effectively entice the shopper with previously established habits and loyalties to "experiment" at Shoppers.

Premium Stamps

With regard to premium stamps, approximately 85.5% of the population within the area saves stamps. 76.4% of this group save S&H green stamps, but only 4% of the population is interested enough in premium stamps to change their shopping habits in order to obtain them. The others save them merely because they are given away. The attractiveness of premium stamps appears to be only a minor motivating factor in the consumer's choice of a market. They are motivated primarily in their selection of places to shop by other factors such as prices, quality of merchandise, and plain habit. However, all other things being equal, 57% of these "stamp savers" indicated that they would give preference to a new market which offers premium stamps over a new market which does not. What is more significant is that the remaining 43% indicated that they would probably shop at the store which did not give stamps "because the prices of items are usually a little higher in such stores". Included in this latter group were a significant number of Shoppers customers.

In summary, the above data tends to indicate that it would be unwise at the present time to incorporate premium stamps in your general sales policy, unless such could be accompanied by a properly handled institutional campaign designed to alter and counteract the negative attitudes of the population toward the premium stamp—even then, it is quite doubtful that the resulting increase in volume would cover the cost of the stamps.

Competition

There are six supermarkets within a mile radius of Shoppers Market, and one market—Ralph's—beyond this radius, which draw upon the total shopping volume of the area; however, All American, Raisin's, Arvos, and Market Basket are the chief competitors. All American draws 17.2% of the total shopping volume in the area; Raisin's draws 10.6%; arvos draws 10.3%; Market Basket draws 6.0% and Ralph's draws 3.2%. Wong's, Food Fair, and the few "mamma and papa" markets combined draw 10.2% of the total volume. The remaining 42.3% of the total volume is drawn from the area by Shoppers Market.

It is essential to determine the basic motivating factors which cause consumers to select a particular market. On the basis of our research findings the strongest factors influencing the Norwalk shoppers are price, convenience, habit, and loyalty.

Most shoppers have selected the market closest to them, or one which is on their route home. Once a market has been selected, they have a tendency quickly to form strong habits and experiment with other stores only to a slight degree.

Significantly, most of the shoppers who patronize stores other than Shoppers have never even visited the Shoppers location. On the other hand, a large percentage of Shoppers customers have experimented with several stores and have chosen Shoppers Market over all the others.

Interviews revealed another surprising fact. There was an almost total absence of negative comments about Shoppers Markets both from those who patronize Shoppers regularly and those who do not. Of those who do not use Shoppers, of course, many had never tried the store. However, among all those who had ever used the store, virtually all comments were favorable. Another phase of this picture is that Shoppers' regular customers do have negative attitudes toward other stores. They feel that they have in Shoppers the "ideal" shopping center, that prices are higher in other stores, and that quality of merchandise is much better than other stores in the area.

Those who do not use Shoppers Market regularly believe that prices and quality are about the same at all the stores in the area. Most homemakers who believe this have not experimented with all the stores. In short, the 42.3% who use Shoppers are satisfied and loyal. The 57.7% who do not use Shoppers have based their selection of a store mainly on convenience, and are bound by habit to continue using the first store selected. An advertising program combining (1) price advertising (which at present is not convincing non-Shoppers customers that prices are lower there) and (2) institutional copy which would make them aware of the other advantages of Shoppers Market, would probably be more effective as a lever to pry them from established shopping habits.

The Area and its Potential

The mile radius around Shoppers Market is bounded on the north by Florence, the south by Leffingwell Road, the east by Pioneer, and the west by Woodruff. It is a very densely populated residential area, now almost saturated with private dwelling units. Approximately 90% of the area available for residential growth has been developed. There is an almost total absence of multiple dwelling units, and it is possible that further property developments will be additional private dwelling units. The remaining 10% will most likely be covered by 400 to 500 private dwelling units during the next year to two years. If the present average of 4.13 per family continues, this should mean a population increase of approximately 2,065. This represents an increased shopping potential for the area from the present figure of $116,111.16 to about $128,536.00 per week. If it is assumed that Shoppers will at least continue their 42.3% of the shopping volume, this should mean an increase in Shoppers' volume of from $5,000 to $6,000 per week within the next two year period.

Statistical Data

Shoppers Market—Norwalk

The above data indicates that Shoppers is drawing fully 67% of its total volume from within a mile radius of the store location. The remaining 33% is coming from outside the mile radius. In order to more accurately determine the exact source of this 33%, additional interviews were conducted outside the mile radius. The results of this additional research indicate that approximately 80% of this outside volume is coming from within the segment between the mile radius and the two mile radius. The remaining 20% (or 6% of the store's total weekly volume) stems from transient traffic, either from passing motorists or from persons visiting Auction city.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 336-60-CC Civil

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,

v.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, Defendants

MEMORANDUM OPINION—September 14, 1964

This is an action instituted by the United States to enjoin the acquisition of Shopping Bag Food stores by Von's Grocery Company which, it is alleged, violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18). Prior to March 28, 1960, the defendants operated as separate corporations, they are now merged. Jurisdiction exists in this court under Section 15 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 25). Plaintiff contends and defendants deny that the effect of the merger between the defendants in this proceeding may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.[1]

The complaint was filed on March 25, 1960, and on

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

March 28, 1960, an application for a temporary restraining order was denied by another judge of this court. Thereafter an application was made by plaintiff for a preliminary injunction to require Von's and Shopping Bag to be operated as separate entities pending trial of the action. This application was also denied by another judge of this court on June 13, 1960, and on July 1, 1960, interlocutory findings of fact and conclusions of law and the interlocutory order denying the motion for preliminary injunction were filed.

On April 24, 1961, a pretrial conference order, signed by the parties, was approved by the court. On December 15, 1961, plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment which was also denied by another judge of this court.

Beginning in November, 1962, and while discovery proceedings were in progress, efforts were made by the court and counsel to arrive at a method for the presentation of the evidence which would expedite the trial which had been estimated to consume from two to three months. A plan was finally formulated and stipulated to by the parties whereby either side might present, in lieu of oral testimony, affidavits of persons who had been expected to testify. Thereafter the opposing party, if it were desired, could cross-examine such witness by taking a deposition. This procedure was followed with respect to practically all of the witnesses which the parties had anticipated calling at the trial. Both parties called a relatively few witnesses to present oral testimony at the trial. As a result of the pretrial procedures, the case consumed only approximately five days in actual trial time. Also a great many of the facts in the case were either stipulated to or admitted.

In accordance with the pretrial order, as amended, the following facts were admitted and required no proof:

It was agreed that the trial should be confined to the issue of whether the merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the matter of relief; in the event it was determined that Section 7 had been violated, hearings would thereafter be held as to appropriate relief; Von's was a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business at Los Angeles, California; subsequent to the merger it moved its offices to the former Shopping Bag headquarters at El Monte, California; Von's was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area; and its predecessors had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products since 1932; in 1959, Von's operated 28 supermarkets in the Los Angeles area with a total annual sales of approximately $85,000,000 for an average of approximately $3,000,000 in sales per store; also its super markets are of the self-service, cash and carry type;

Von's also owned and operated a modern distribution center; direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute the groceries to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area; after the merger Von's sold its distribution center to a competitor and has since used the former Shopping Bag distribution center;

Shopping Bag was a California corporation with principal offices at El Monte, California; on the date of the merger, Shopping Bag was merged into Von's prior to the merger, Shopping Bag was a leading chain of supermarkets; it and its predecessors had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sales of a complete line of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area since 1933; in 1959, Shopping Bag operated 36 complete supermarkets in the area, which had a total annual sales of approximately $79,000,000 for an average of approximately $2,100,000 in sales per store; all of its stores were of the self-service, cash and carry type;

In 1958, Von's ranked third and Shopping Bag fifth in terms of total sales by grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area; Von's had approximately 4.10% and Shopping Bag approximately 3.09% of all grocery store sales in the area; Shopping Bag ranked sixth and Von's eighth in terms of total number of markets operated in the area in that year; combined, Von's and Shopping Bag ranked second in terms of dollar of sales and in terms of total number of supermarkets in the metropolitan area; following the merger, Von's accounted for approximately 8% of all grocery sales in the area; taken as a whole, the following products were agreed to constitute the relevant line of commerce in the case: groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy produce, delicatessen produce, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs, and sundries; in 1959, the sale of food products accounted for 90% of all sales by grocery stores in the area;

The relevant trade area in which defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles metropolitan area consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties; Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income, and retail dollar sales; approximately 6,750,000 persons reside in the area and total retail sales were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957; the Los Angeles metropolitan area is an appreciable trade area and a section of the country within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act; sales of groceries in the area approximate $2,500,000,000 annually;

Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger were engaged in interstate commerce and Von's presently is engaged in interstate commerce; several cooperatives operate in the metropolitan area, some who sell to nonmembers; Orange Empire, a cooperative, services numerous retail members and nonmembers in California, Arizona, and Nevada with an annual wholesale sales of approximately $280,000,000; prior to the merger, the twenty leading chains of supermarkets were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the area and each of the chains competed with each other; there was direct competition between some of the Von's stores and some of the Shopping Bag stores, particularly in those instances where the stores were so located that they were competing for the same customers.

With respect to the issues of fact and law, the parties are in agreement as follows: (1) that the defendant corporations were engaged in interstate commerce; (2) that the court has jurisdiction; (3) that any products or groups of products which are of sufficiently peculiar characteristics and uses as to make them distinct from all other products are in line of commerce within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act and that groceries and related products, taken as a whole, have such peculiar characteristics and uses in the operation of retail grocery stores; (4) that groceries and related products are the relevant line of commerce for determining whether the instant merger violates Section 7; (5) that the area of effective competition is a section of the country in the instant case; (6) that the relevant section of the country need not be the entire nation; (7) that the Los Angeles metropolitan area is a relevant section of the country for determining the effect of the merger.

In view of the stipulations and pretrial orders, it thus appears that the court is called upon to decide only the issue as to whether the merger may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the line of commerce and section of the country here involved.

The government apparently in one of its latest memoranda insists, at least inferentially, that the impact upon suppliers is involved as one of the issues in the case. However, it is to be noted that in the pretrial order, as amended, it is stated that defendants assert that the Los Angeles area is not the relevant section of the country as to the wholesale sale and purchase of groceries. There also appears the following:

> "The government assumes no burden of proof as to the relevant section of the country at the wholesale level since it intends to base its case on the probable effects of the merger in the relevant section of the country for grocery retailers which is the Los Angeles metropolitan area." (Emphasis supplied.)

Obviously the pretrial order confined the parties to the matters agreed to therein. Furthermore, the government made no attempt to predicate its case upon the basis that suppliers had been eliminated.

Both the legislative history [2] and decisions of the Supreme Court, beginning with Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, set forth the purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The act was intended to prevent a merger or acquisition of assets when the effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, It was noted in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, at page 332, United States Reports: "But the very wording of § 7 requires a prognosis of the probable future effect of the merger" (italics original). It would appear that in order to determine the future effect resort must be had to the developments in the retail grocery business in the area in question. In making this determination it must be kept in mind that the act intended to cover more than the Sherman Act, yet to stop short of the stated test of Section 7 as it existed at the time the matter was before the Congress for amendment.

The legislative history[3] indicates that the purpose of the proposed amendment to Section 7 was to prohibit the acquisition of the assets of another corporation when the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The over-all purpose was to limit further growth of monopoly and aid in preserving small business. On the one hand, it was desired that the test be more inclusive and stricter than that of the Sherman Act; on the other hand, it was not desired that the legislation go to the extreme of prohibiting all acquisition between competing companies. The intent was to cope with monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and before they had attained such effects as to justify a Sherman Act proceeding. It should be noted that the Senate Report states:

> "These various additions and deletions — some strengthening and others weakening the bill—are not conflicting in purpose and effect. They merely are different steps toward the same objective, namely, that of framing a bill which, though "dropping portions of the so-called Clayton Act test that have no economic significance, reaches far beyond the Sherman Act." (p. 4297)

The words, "may be," appear in the bill in defining the effect on competition. The committee report states:

> "The use of these words means that the bill, if enacted, would not apply to the mere possibility but only to the reasonable probability of the prescribed effect, • • •" (p. 4298)

Before the merger, Von's percentage of sales was 4.7%, while Shopping Bag's was 4.2%. Combined, they represent 8.9% ofthe sales of the metropolitan area. The following table shows the industry rank and share of the total grocery sales of the 10 leading chains in the area in 1958:

	1958 Rank in Sales Before Merger	1958 Rank in Sales After Merger	Sales in Los Angeles Metropolitan Area	Percentage
Total of Von and Shopping Bag	—	1	$177,867,000	8.9
Safeway	1	2	161,233,000	8.0
Ralph's	2	3	128,283,000	6.4
Von	3	—	93,703,000	4.7
Market Basket	4	4	88,806,000	4.4
Thriftimart	5	5	88,583,000	4.4
Shopping Bag	6	—	84,164,000	4.2
Food Giant	7	6	72,727,000	3.6
Alpha Beta Raisins	8	7	62,727,000	3.1
Fox Markets	9	8	56,438,000	2.8
Mayfair	10	9	39,360,000	2.0
			Total	42.6

The change in the number of stores in the area is indicated by the following computions, the word, "multiple," meaning units of two or more stores operated as one concern:

	Jan. 1, 1950	Jan. 1, 1961	Jan. 1, 1963
Single	5,365	3,818	3,590
Multiple	856	923	958
	6,221	4,741	4,548

Between 1948 and 1958 the market share of the 20 largest chains increased from 43.8% to 56.9%. The government contends that the merger had the effect of substantially lessening competition in that separate conduits through which substantial quantities of groceries and related products flowed were united into a single organization; also that the merger united purchasing and warehousing functions, the purchase of advertizing as well as all other functions which had formerly been carried on by each of the two corporations.

The government industry witnesses were single stores operators and in practically every instance testified that in their opinion the merger would lessen competition. In most instances, their opinions were of little assistance since at best they were merely conclusions without supporting data or explanation. The defendants presented numerous industry witnesses who testified that the merger would increase competition rather than decrease it. The government did not cross-examine the defense industry witnesses; but the defendants cross-examined the industry witnesses produced by the government. While the government offered some evidence to account for the decrease in the number of single stores, in the main it predicated its position upon the decrease in the number of such stores with the increase in population at the same time.

Many factors appear to account for the decrease in stores and most of those factors are not necessarily connected with the growth of the chains. For example: in in 1931, Safeway had approximately 1,000 stores in the area and today it has only 147. The reason for this appears to be the development of the supermarket, the shopping centers, and the decrease of the small neighborhood grocery store. Furthermore, the shift in the population, the shift in transportation from streetcars to automobile, and many changes in merchandising methods effected the change to the supermarket era. The evidence as to closed chain stores disclosed many reasons for such closings such as failure of some of the local chains, closings to move to what were considered better locations, closings because of the change to the supermarket store, and in some instances the movement of population. Also many of the disappearing single stores became part of chains of two or more stores. One of the important factors in many of the failures was lack of previous experience in the grocery business; however, it was impossible to arrive at the number of failures in this category. It was impossible to determine the number of closings of grocery stores because of the construction of freeways, although the number must have been substantial.

The evidence showed that many persons had entered into the grocery business in recent years often as single store operators and had been successful in increasing their business from year to year. For example: Wood, a grocer, has developed a 10-store chain since 1954, while Grocer Goodnight left a major chain in 1959 and since 1960 has developed a 7-store chain. Defendants produced at least 10 witnesses who had opened single stores in recent years and who have continued to increase their sales year by year. In each instance, they have been competing with the major chains with stores located close to them. One outstanding example was that of Grocer Gelson, who began with assets of $5,000 in 1946 in a small market in North Hollywood. In 1951, he sold this and ultimately ended up in a market in Encino. His annual sales now are approximately $6,000,000, although he is in competition with stores of the larger chains, the smaller chains, and others.

One thing that stands out in the case is the fact that many executives from chain store operations have left the various chains and opened up stores on their own, usually beginning with a single store and ultimately developing into a small chain of supermarkets. An executive for one of the chains testified that one of the great problems for the larger chains was the loss of executives who were leaving to open grocery businesses of their own. In many instances, these persons have purchased a single store of one of the chains, usually where it was not doing too well, and from that point developed a successful grocery retail business. The experience gained while employed by larger chains has apparently been the basis for the success of many of these operations.

On the other hand, it is to be noted that several of the smaller chains encountered difficulty because of lack of experience, over expansion, and lack of capitalization and were forced into bankruptcy or compelled to sell. The evidence leaves no doubt that experience in the grocery business has usually made it possible for a person to enter the retail grocery field as a single store operator and be successful.

Witness Lebhar, Editor-in-Chief of "Chain Store Age," which publishes "Chain Store Age," "Shopping Center Age," "Discount Store News," and who is also an officer of the Board of Business Guides, Inc., and other publications, testified that the number of concerns operating two or more grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties increased from 96 in 1953 to 150 in 1962 but that the greatest increase during the period occurred in the number of concerns operating 2 or 3 stores. Such concerns increase 86% —from 56 to 104. His testimony also showed that 7 of the 24 chains which operated 10 or more stores in 1962 were not in business as chains in 1953.

It is interesting to note that in 1948 Safeway accounted for 14.2% of sales in the area and Ralph's, 6.9%, for a total of 21.1%; but in 1958, Safeway and Ralph's combined had declined to 14.3% despite a substantial increase in their sales volume. In other words, during the period when it is claimed that the competitive situation was deteriorating, single store operators and small chains were beginning, growing, and competing successfully.

In 1960, the approximately 4,800 stores in the area were operated by 4,000 separate concerns. During 1960, 128 new "single outlet" stores opened. The leading 20 chains opened 67 new stores in 1960 against 171 by smaller chains and single store operators. While the 10 leading chains accounted for 43.6%, the remainder, including 3.818 single store operators, accounted for 56.4% of the sales in the area in 1960. Another indication of the competitive situation is the fact that Shopping Bag's gross increased while its profits decreased. The witness, Hayden, president of the company, testified that this was occasioned by competition as well as the need for experienced executives.

There was considerable evidence relative to the part played in the grocery business by the so-called cooperatives, namely: the Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., Spartan Cooperative, and Orange Empire. (There is disagreement by the parties as to whether Orange is a cooperative or merely a grocery wholesaler.) Each of these sells only to its members; however, there is apparently no restriction upon those who may become members. The role of the cooperative is of major importance in the distribution of groceries. Certified is wholly owned by the grocery retailers who buy through it. Its membership consists of approximately 900 grocery concerns which operate almost 1,600 retail stores. Spartan Grocers is a wholly owned subsidiary of Certified with approximately 1,200 members who operate 1,255 stores. Most of their members are engaged in business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Certified handles more than 13,000 items, including dry groceries, frozen foods, delicatessen products, and various non-food products, including housewares and appliances.

The evidence indicated that some of the larger chains buy their grocery products through Certified. Certified's annual sales increased from $87,000,000 in 1948 to $345,000,000 in 1962.

Orange Empire with approximately 1,000 members accounted for wholesale sales of $321,000,000 in 1963. Certified, Spartan, and Orange do not carry fresh meat or produce or certain dairy products. Generally speaking, the three, Certified, Spartan, and Orange, are made up of a membership of smaller concerns operating from 1 to 20 stores. In so far as the products which are sold by the 3 cooperatives are concerned, there can be little doubt that the single operator or small grocer can compete effectively with the large chains or anyone else in purchasing such groceries.

As to produce which is not distributed by the 3 cooperatives, the evidence indicates that the single store or small operator could effectively compete in purchasing such produce. The government appeared to contend that the large chains had a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies. However, the evidence failed to support this claim.

Another group row participating in the distribution of groceries is the discount house. The evidence indicates that this phase is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantially additional competitive force. While the development of the discount house apparently indicates a return to the general store, so, in turn, is the supermarket moving more and more toward the concept of a general store. Many of them now include not only groceries but hardware, appliances, liquor, and many other items which in the past have been distributed by specialty stores.

One of the contentions made by the government is that the chains have a distinct advantage over the smaller concerns in obtaining space in the shopping centers. This is probably true since the average builder of a shopping center is anxious to obtain a longtime lease by a large chain with a well advertised name which will attract attention and also induce other large concerns to lease areas in the shopping center. It is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer the company with the greater financial resources. Shopping centers are usually in new developments and require some pioneering. The record does not disclose the number of supermarkets in shopping centers or a definition of "shopping centers."

One of the witnesses for defendants, Campbell Stewart, gave testimony which should be accorded considerable weight. He operated retail grocery stores in the area from 1927 to 1945, at which time he became general manager and vice president of Certified. In 1955 he became president, retiring in 1961 although continuing his employment as consultant to Certified. He pointed out that his organization was started by 15 owners of 1 or 2 stores so that they could pool their purchases and enjoy quantity discounts obtained by the larger concerns. At the time of trial, he testified that Certified is the largest retail-owned food wholesaler in the United States; that Certified is directly concerned by any development in the food retail business which might affect small grocery retailers since they have always been and still are the primary source of Certified's business. He stated that, if the small retailers were placed at a competitive disadvantage, Certified would be adversely affected. He went on to state that in his opinion the merger in question would not tend to substantially lessen competition.

The government's case appears to be predicated upon the following: (1) the union of 2 substantial competitors in the area, (2) increased concentration, (3) a reduction of separate competitive factors, and (4) the elimination of the acquired firm as a separate competitive entity. It will be readily noted that propositions 2, 3, and 4 are necessarily included in proposition 1, that is, the union of 2 substantial competitors. Obviously when 2 substantial competitors merge there has to be increased concentration and a reduction of the separate competitive factors as between the two and the elimination of one as a separate competitive entity. It thus appears that the government in this case is really relying upon a mere union between "2 substantial competitive factors." This, in practical effect, goes back to the Section 7 test which was in effect prior to the amendment of the act in 1950, and was eliminated as was clearly pointed out in the Senate Report. The government argues that over-all competition has been substantially reduced by the merger, but the proof falls short of establishing such to be the case. In fact, the figures relied upon by the government tend to establish to the contrary. Again it is repeated that in 1960 the approximately 4,800 stores in the area were operated by 4,000 separate concerns. The merger here did not materially change that situation. It did not increase or decrease competition store for store with any grocer, single store, or chain, since the acquired stores continued as before. As between stores, only a few of those of Von's and Shopping Bag were in direct competition since generally each company's stores were in different localities of the area. A few did compete directly. Apparently the reason for the failure of the evidence to pinpoint a decrease in competition was because there was actually no decrease.

The parties stipulated to the following, showing the breakdown of concerns in the area in 1962:

Concerns Operating	No. of Concerns
10 or more stores	24
4 to 9 stores	22
2 to 3 stores	104
1 store	3,709
Total	3,859

It was also stipulated as follows:

> "4. The following table compares the number of stores operated by and the combined market share of the 20 largest chains in the area in 1958 with the "smaller chains and independents.*

	No. of Stores	Market Share
		Govt. Fig.	Def. Fig.
Top 20 chains	598	56.9%	54.3%
Independents and smaller chains	4,301	43.1	45.7"

Here it should be noted that the government seeks to have the court disregard evidence of what occurred after March 20, 1960, the date of the filing of the suit. It is difficult to take such a contention seriously in view of the government's reliance upon facts occurring up to as late as January 1, 1963. For example: Government Exhibit 35 sets forth the number of single and multiple stores as of January 1, 1963, and the government in its proposed findings of fact included these figures. The government's proposed findings of fact also set out figures for both 1961 and 1962 respecting single and multiple stores. Suffice it to say that both Brown Shoe and DuPont refer to facts occurring after suit was filed and during the pendency of the suit. It would indeed be an incongruity for a court to close its eyes to facts which would, with a reasonable degree of certainty, establish whether or not there was reasonable probability of the lessening of competition and predicate its decision solely upon prediction or prognosis. A court of equity cannot at the time of its decree disregard changed conditions since the filing of the suit or adopt a conclusion that has since proved to be unwarranted.

The evidence respecting the economic conditions existing during the years, 1961, 1962, 1963, would appear to be far more reliable as a guide in determining the effect of the merger than the "prognosis" mentioned in Brown Shoe.

One of the principal witnesses for the government supplied evidence which is of material benefit to a determination of this case. He was Ward Jenssen, a market consultant who has worked for a number of chains such as Food Giant, Ralph's, Market Basket, and others. From his research it was developed that customers of supermarkets take various things into consideration including the following: price, general appearance of the store, size and variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, check stand service, cleanliness of the store, etc. The average customer is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about 4 miles, to shop. Jenssen found that shoppers are willing to pass by other stores in order to go to a specific store which they believed well met their top demands. Research has thus indicated what the shopper wants. The supermarket usually offers most of these things, while the corner grocery cannot. In its "Summary of the Facts" the government states that the decline in the number of individual grocery stores resulted "largely from increasing size of supermarkets * * * and fewer stores are needed to serve a comparable number of people." This appears to account for the decrease in the number of stores and it apparently is what the consumer desires.

The evidence showed that the average shopper has from 2 to 10 competing stores within convenient distance to shop. To increase the number of stores in the area may sound good but to do so may well require a return to the corner grocery and the elimination of the services and quality and variety of products which the public now seems to demand. One thing does appear: Price reduction has gone about as far as possible. The remaining factor is service to the customer and his convenience. An effort to set up an economic environment to equalize competitors in the grocery business will not only destroy the competitive factors which afford the public the benefits which they are now receiving but may well result in much higher prices. The key to success in the grocery business in the area does not appear to rest upon the number of stores operated but how they are operated. From all of the economic factors disclosed, there appears generally to have been a change from the small corner grocery to the supermarket. This would seem to be the main reason for the decrease in the number of stores in the area.

The evidence discloses that the competition in the area appears to remain vigorous, open to anyone and especially those with experience and training, and the consumer is reaping the full benefit. From the evidence, it cannot be concluded that the merger in question would probably lessen competition in the metropolitan area either at the time of the merger or in the foreseeable future. The defendants are entitled to judgment.

Counsel for the defendants is directed to prepare proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment pursuant to Rule 58, F.R.C.P., and to serve and lodge the same with the clerk of the court within 30 days, and plaintiff shall have 15 days thereafter to serve and file objections thereto.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Civil Action No. 336-60-CC

[Title omitted]

THE GOVERNMENT'S OBJECTIONS TO THE DEFENDANTS' REVISED SET OF PROPOSED FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—Filed December 3, 1964

These objections are submitted in response to the Court's order of November 19, 1964.

I. Introductory Statement

For the third time the defendants in this case have submitted virtually the same argumentative, verbose, redundant, strongly worded and conclusory advocate's brief which they ask the Court to adopt as its findings of fact. They do this after the Court gave them the opportunity to revise their proposed findings in an effort to conform to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Under these circumstances we respectfully submit that the words adopted by the Supreme Court in United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Company, 376 U.S. 651 (1964) describe the action proposed by the defendants:

> It is a non-compliance with Rule 52 specifically and it betrays the primary purpose of Rule 52—the primary purpose being that the preparation of these findings by the judge shall assist in the adjudication of the lawsuit. (656-657, n. 4).

For the Court's convenience in part I we briefly discuss basic problems raised by the defendants' proposed findings, in part II we enumerate our general and specific objections to the defendants' proposed findings, and in part III we propose alternative language to certain findings. We also respectfully refer the Court to the discussion on pages 2 through 18 of our objections of October 28, 1964 since that discussion is generally applicable to the resubmitted findings.

A. The Revised Proposed Findings

The length, complexity, excessive detail and argumentative style of the defendants' revised proposed findings makes them questionable on their face.

In criticizing similar findings the late Judge Jerome Frank used the following language in United States v. Forness, 125 Fed. 2nd 928 (2nd Cir. 1942), at page 942:

> We have recently asked for "brief and pertinent findings of contested matters * * * rather than the delayed, argumentative, overdetailed documents prepared by winning counsel."

Also see Matton Oil Transfer Corp. v. Tug Dynamic, 123 Fed. 2nd 999, 1001 (2nd Cir. 1941), a per curiam opinion by Judges Learned Hand, Charles Clark and Jerome Frank.

Judge Frank's admonition that findings should relate to "contested matters" and be "brief and pertinent" cannot be reconciled with the defendants' repetitive and circuitous findings proposed herein which cover 40 legal-sized pages.

The length, redundancy and complexity of the defendants' proposed findings is highlighted when it is recalled that there were very few "contested matters" in this case. Indeed, the Court entered a Pretrial Conference Order and a Stipulation after Trial which crystalized most of the relevant facts. Moreover, the Court filed a 19-page memorandum opinion on September 14, 1964, setting forth the facts from which the Court concluded in favor of the defendants.

Against this background there is no need for the lengthy, detailed and argumentative set of findings which defendants would impose on the record in this case.

It is also incumbent upon us again to call the Court's attention to the general, argumentative and sweeping language retained by the defendants in this their third set of proposed findings.

In this regard we suggest that the following quotation from the hearings before this Court on Tuesday, March 24, 1964 demonstrates the weakness of the findings proposed by the defendants. There (at page 155) the Court properly addressed the following questions to Government counsel who had been using rather general language:

> Q. What is "many"? I don't know, I don't understand. . . .
> Is "many" three or 55?

It is respectfully submitted that an excessive number of the defendants' proposed findings employ the same type of general language which the Court justifiably criticized in the above quotations. Words and phrases such as "many", "few", "for the most part", "some" etc., appear with alarming frequency throughout the proposed findings.

The pattern of defendants' findings is set in proposed finding 4 which reads as follows:

> 4. For the most part, Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

Use of the phrase "for the most part" is meaningless. A number of maps were submitted plotting the location of various Von's stores. We suggest that the proposed finding is of no value unless the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are defined and the actual number of stores in each area is given.

As shown in the Government's specific objections individual proposed findings are objectionable because they employ the same type of general and argumentative language.

Moreover, when viewed as a whole, the revised proposed findings are objectionable because they constitute a long advocate's brief couched in general and sweeping language, rather than an objective statement of specific facts.

B. Suggestion by the Court

The Court has suggested that it might rule that the memorandum opinion of September 14, 1964 constitutes the Court's findings of fact in this litigation.

For the reasons set forth below we suggest that such a course would be more in accord with the Federal Rules than adopting the argumentative statement proposed by the defendants. We respectfully suggest that the Court should adopt the Pre-trial Conference Order and the Stipulation after Trial, as part of its findings of fact.

The memorandum opinion contains the Court's statement of the findings which it adopted as the basis for its conclusion. The lengthy proposed findings of the defendants do not resolve a single contested issue not considered in the memorandum opinion. Moreover, the inexact language and general wordiness of the defendants' proposed findings tend to confuse issues rather than resolve them.

Regardless of labels, the Supreme Court will go to the memorandum opinion for the factual statement upon which the District Court based its decision. As stated by Judges Hand, Clark and Frank in the Matton Oil case, supra, at page 1001, the reviewing Court will place the emphasis > [U]pon a finding made as a part of the judge's opinion and decision, rather than the delayed, argumentative, overdetailed documents prepared by winning counsel after the event which often appear in appellate records, though they are not effective aids to adjudication. . . .

Moreover the most recent proposed findings submitted by the defendants are substantially the same as the first set submitted by them on July 3, 1963. Thus the Court has already incorporated in its memorandum opinion those parts of the defendants' proposed findings which it adopted to decide the case.

As stated by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in the Matton Oil opinion, supra, at p. 1001:

> The findings and conclusions of the court, . . . which actually led it to decision are helpful, and we do not think trial courts will find it unduly burdensome to state those briefly and concisely at the time decision is made.

In the words used by Judge Jerome Frank in the Forness case, supra, at p. 942:

> [T]he better practice [is that] of filing findings with the opinion, when the evidence is still fresh in the mind of the trial judge, and permitting the parties to file objections under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 52(b).

The Court has already made its findings in the memorandum opinion of September 14, 1964. The long, argumentative and conclusory statement proposed by defense counsel is objectionable, will not assist the Supreme Court and should not be adopted by the trial Court. It would be more consistent with the Federal Rules for the Court to adopt its memorandum opinion as its findings of fact without impairment to the rights of the parties to file appropriate motions under Rules 52(b) and 59. Moreover, we respectfully suggest that the Court may wish to reconsider the proposed findings submitted by the Government on July 3, 1963.

II. Objections

The Government's objections to the defendants' revised set of proposed findings are enumerated below. The Government's general objections are set forth in A and specific objections are set forth in B. In making these objections to the defendants' proposed findings and in suggesting alternative language the Government reserves all its right under Rule 52(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

A. General Objections

The Government objects generally to the defendants' proposed findings on the following grounds:

1. They represent the position of counsel for one party but do not represent the findings of the Court.
2. They seek to edit, reword, revise and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order nad the Stipulation after Trial, and
3. Viewed collectively they are incomplete, conclusory, argumentative and do not conform to the Court's memorandum opinion.

B. Specific Objections

In addition to the general objections set forth above, the Government objects to the following individual paragraphs and subparagraphs in the findings proposed by the defendants for the reasons stated.

Paragraphs 1 and 2. These proposed findings are objectionable because they are part of a series which seek to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 3. We object to this proposed finding because it is too complex, tends to revice the Pre-trial Order, and ignores the statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion. Its reference to food stores sales is inconsistent with the stipulated line of commerce, viz., grocery and related products. In addition, defendants' stress on number of stores instead of sales distorts the true market shares of defendants. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 4. We object to this proposed finding on the ground that it is vague, meaningless, conclusory and unsupported by the evidence. There is evidence in the record to support more specific findings. The actual address and map location of each Von and Shopping Bag store for the year 1960 are in evidence and set forth in Exhibit 82. A proposed finding beginning with a vague "for the most part" is no finding at all. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraphs 5, 6, 7 and 8. These proposed findings are objectionable because they are part of a series which seek to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 9. We object to this proposed finding because it is too complex, tends to revise the Pre-trial Order, and ignores the statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion. Its reference to food stores sales is inconsistent with the stipulated line of commerce, viz., groceries and related products. In addition, the stress on number of stores instead of sales distorts the true market shares of defendants. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 10. We object to this proposed finding on the ground that it is vague, meaningless, conclusory and unsupported by the evidence. There is evidence in the record to support more specific findings. The actual address and map location of each Von and Shopping Bag store for the year 1960 are in evidence and set forth in Exhibit 82. A proposed finding beginning with a vague "for the most part" is no finding at all. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 11. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is part of a series which seeks to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 12. We object to this proposed finding because it conclusory, irrelevant and not supported by the record. The motivation behind the merger is irrelevant. Furthermore the merger discussions were commenced by Von after it had merger discussions with other chains, viz., Kroger and Alexander's. When negotiations were commenced, Shopping Bag had record sales.

Paragraph 12(a). This finding ignores the evidence in the record which shows the extent to which individual Von and Shopping Bag stores were able to serve identical customers.

Paragraph 12(b). Defendants' argument of inefficient management is not supported. Mr. W. R. Hayden and all the other officers of Shopping Bag were retained by Von subsequent to the merger. The 1957, 1958 and 1959 sales figures do not correctly reflect the fact that Shopping Bag expended a great deal of money to open a record number of supermarkets in 1958 and 1959. Shopping Bag was always a profitable corporation and at the time of the initiation of the merger negotiations it had record profits. Furthermore the Shopping Bag warehouse was among the newest, largest and most modern in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. This warehouse was retained by the Von chain and Von's old warehouse was sold subsequent to the merger.

Paragraph 13. The Government objects to this proposed finding because it is irrelevant and unsupported by the record which indicates Shopping Bag was a financially sound chain. There is no evidence that Shopping Bag's earnings and profits had "steadily declined," nor is there evidence that other chains had similar problems. Furthermore the "unqualified" Shopping Bag management has been retained by Von subsequent to the merger.

Paragraphs 14 and 15. These proposed findings are objectionable because they are part of a series which seek to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. (See recommended changes in III, infra).

Paragraph 16. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is part of a series which seeks to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial.

Paragraphs 17 through 22. We object to these proposed findings because they are vague and meaningless. They contain many vague references, e.g., "a number of", "few", "usually", "typical" and "virtual." This historical information is based largely upon self-serving testimony of the chief executive officers of both defendants and the weight it should be given and its relevance to this merger is questionable.

Paragraph 23. We object to the last sentence of this finding on the grounds that it is not a proper finding. These statistics are in evidence and are in the Court's memorandum opinion at p. 9.

Paragraph 24. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is speculative in that it guesses at "some" of the reasons for failures over the years. It speculates on "some" of the reasons for a decline in the number of stores, but leaves out many of the most important, viz., that small grocers were unable to compete with the larger chains, the power of which has been enhanced by mergers. Part of the economic power of large chains is used to secure better locations.

The data contained in this proposed finding does not contradict the facts set forth in paragraph 23, viz., that the number of single outlet grocery stores is steadily declining, while the number of multiple outlet stores increase.

Paragraph 25. We object to the vagueness of this finding which refers to a "large number" of Safeway stores.

Paragraph 26. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is part of a series which seeks to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. Furthermore it is highly argumentative and incomplete. It attempts to gloss over the decline in the number of stores at the time of the increase in population in the area and fails to show that in 1950 there were 1.4 grocery stores per thousand population in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area while in 1961 there were 0.7 stores per thousand population (Exhibits 33, 34).

Paragraph 27. This proposed finding is complex, incomplete, distorted and argumentative. It is an argumentative conclusion to state the 1950's were "characterized" by the entry of new concerns. Indeed, if the 1950's were characterized by anything, it is that the number of stores and operators decline. It ignores the fact that the entry of new concerns and the growth of existing concerns was largely by means of acquisitions and mergers with pre-existing markets and chains. The specific mergers and acquisitions are set forth in Exhibits 44, 45 and 78.

The statement that Safeway and Ralph's "were not able to maintain" their market shares because of increased competition is conclusory and unsupported by the evidence. The record merely shows that the market share of Safeway, a large national chain, declined in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area while converting from small stores to large stores.

Paragraph 27(b). This proposed finding is objectionable because it is incomplete and misleading in that it shows openings of stores and ignores closings.

Paragraph 28. We object to this proposed finding because it is incomplete, distorted and argumentative. The seven examples of new chains entering or expanding in the relevant market since 1950 does not show, as Exhibits 44, 45 and 78 demonstrate, that most of the growth of these particular chains was attributable to mergers and acquisitions. Therefore these chains are not true entries but represent the continuation of existing businesses as new corporate entities.

Paragraph 29. Proposed findings 29 through 38 relating to the role of the cooperative in grocery retailing in the Los Angeles area are argumentative, incomplete, distorted, speculative and one-sided. Most of this finding is based upon statements of Campbell Stewart, a former official of Certified Cooperative who was singing the praises of his employer. Many of his conclusions, which are set out in detail in defendants' proposed findings, are not substantiated by his factual testimony, e.g., in paragraph 29 his statement to the effect that cooperative buying gave the members the same quantity discount advantages enjoyed by the larger chains. No evidence has been adduced to demonstrate actual prices and quantity discounts of the chains or the cooperative.

Paragraph 30. We object to this finding because the conclusion that Certified buys at favorable prices is not substantiated by the record.

Paragraph 31. We object to the vagueness of this finding which refers to "some" and "most" of the cooperative members.

Paragraph 32. We object to this finding because the conclusion that Certified can buy "as cheaply" as the larger chains has not been substantiated by the record.

Paragraph 34. We object to this proposed finding since it is argumentative, one-sided and distorted. The statistical data on Certified's sales is grossly misleading. Virtually all of the large chains operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are members of Certified and thus their purchases and sales are represented in the statistics contained in paragraph 34. The statement that "the volume of Certified's purchases exceeds by a large measure the volume of purchases of any chain which does business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area . . ." is misleading since these figures include an unknown but apparently great volume of purchases by the very chains to which Certified is compared.

Paragraph 35. We object to this finding because it is vague and meaningless in that there are no specific statistics on members and sales in the Los Angeles area but rather all statistics refer to the operations of Orange Empire throughout its entire operating area on the West Coast.

Paragraph 36. The Government objects to this proposed finding because the conclusion that the small grocer can compete with the large chains in purchasing through the cooperative is argumentative. Referral to a vague category of "small grocery retailers" is meaningless.

Paragraph 37. This proposed finding is meaningless. It is observed that many of the chains referred to in this finding grew by means of acquisition and mergers.

Paragraph 38. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is inconsistent with the evidence and is highly argumentative.

Paragraph 39. This finding is objectionable because it is a conclusion which is not substantiated by the record. Moreover it ignores advantages accruing to Von in the warehousing and distribution of groceries in the Los Angeles area as a result of the merger.

Paragraph 40. We object to this proposed finding because it is contrary to the opinion rendered by this Court on September 14, 1964. It ignores other facets of competition such as those set forth in the Government's recommended paragraph 40, infra. (See recommended changes, III infra).

Paragraph 41. We object to this proposed finding because it is incomplete and therefore misleading. (See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraph 42. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is part of a series which seeks to edit, reframe, rewrite and otherwise color the Court's pre-trial Conference Order and Stipulation after Trial. (See recommended changes, part III, infra).

Paragraph 44. This proposed finding is argumentative, speculative and is directly contrary to the record which shows small grocery concerns disappearing and the large chains enveloping an increasing share of the market. It stresses "many" openings but ignores many more closings which are substantiated by the record.

Paragraph 45. This proposed finding is incomplete and misleading because it stresses a very few examples of openings and ignores closings of grocery stores.

It is observed that of the witnesses cited almost all began their operation by acquisition of existing stores and they were not new entrants in the sense that they added to and increased existing competition.

Mr. Goldberg's (d) conclusion that his sales were more than his nearby competitors is unsupported and speculative.

In spite of their apparent "success", it is noted that Messrs. Eaton, (e), Palmer (f) and Fleishman (g) concluded that:

> [I]f this merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is permitted, there will probably be subsequent mergers between and involving the other major chains, and in all likelihood it will develop that a few large grocery chains will dominate retail grocery distribution through the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. This merger is a major stride in increasing the market share of the large chains and it will accentuate the large chains' advantages over the small grocer. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag will have the effect of substantially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in the sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

Paragraph 46. This proposed finding is incomplete and misleading because it stresses openings and ignores closings of grocery stores. It is also speculative and argumentative. The record does not sustain the statement that "there are no substantial barriers to entry." The chances for success of a new entrant are not "good." Exhibit 36, e.g., demonstrates there were 128 new single outlet groceries opened in 1960 and 260 closed, resulting in a net loss of 132 single outlet stores. At the same time, 119 multiple outlet stores were opened while 42 were closed for a net gain of 77. Defendants' finding would ignore the closings. Exhibits 39 through 42 demonstrate that the small independents opening in 1960 had high mortality rates within a 21 month period whereas the larger stores had progressively smaller mortality rates. For example, Exhibit 42 demonstrates, by categories, the number of Los Angeles grocery stores obtaining grocery permits in 1960 which discontinued them by November 15, 1961:

	Ten Largest Chains	Next Ten Largest Chains	Other Multiple Outlets	All Multiple Outlets	Single Outlets	Total
Obtaining permits	45	22	52	119	127	246
Discontinuing permits	5	5	18	28	53	81
Retaining their original permits	40	17	34	91	74	165

Paragraph 47. This proposed finding is incomplete, biased and argumentative. It stresses openings and ignores closings of grocery stores. It ignores the history of acquisitions and mergers contributing to this growth.

Paragraph 48. This proposed finding is incomplete, vague and argumentative. It stresses openings and ignores closings of grocery stores. It glosses over the history of mergers and acquisitions in the area by vaguely referring to "apparent" new entries. (See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraph 49. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is incomplete and misleading in that it leaves the impression that a change of ownership, of corporate status, or the acquisition of an existing store is a new entrant and a new competitor within the industry. This assumption is not true since the substitution of one operator for another does not increase competition by adding a new entrant. This finding stresses openings and ignores closings of grocery stores in the Los Angeles area.

Paragraph 50. We object to this proposed finding as misleading because it stresses openings and ignores closings of grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. It is vague, general and worded in such a manner as to be meaningless. It is unsupported by the evidence. References to terms such as "many", "usually developing into a small chain", "one of the greatest", "in many instances", "apparently" and "several" are meaningless.

Paragraph 51. This proposed finding is objectionable because it ignores statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion.

Paragraph 52. This proposed finding is objectionable because it seeks to ignore chain competition as established in the Pre-trial Conference Order and accepted by the Court in its memorandum opinion. Moreover this proposed finding is a conclusion of fact and law which is not supported by the record.

Paragraph 53. This proposed finding contains conclusions of law and fact and is unsupported by the evidence.

Paragraph 54. We object to this proposed finding on the ground that it is vague, meaningless, conclusory and unsupported by the evidence. There is no evidence in the record to support more specific findings. This finding ignores the evidence in the record which shows the extent to which individual Von and Shopping Bag stores were able to serve identical customers. See recommended changes, III, infra).

This proposed finding is objectionable because it seeks to ignore chain competition as established in the Pre-trial Conference Order and accepted by the Court in its memorandum opinion. (See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraphs 57, 58 and 59. These proposed findings are objectionable because they are legal and factual conclusions unsubstantiated by the record.

Paragraph 60. This finding is objectionable because it stresses grocery store openings and ignores closings.

The footnote to paragraph 60 is also objectionable because later statistics are available from the State Board of Equalization. (See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraph 62. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is an attempt to revise, rewrite and otherwise color the "Stipulation after Trial" entered by the Court.

The proposed finding fails to disclose that the so-called "discount" operations are merely supermarkets operated in discount stores and that the bulk of the operators are among the twenty leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. It also fails to show that the President of Von does not consider discount stores as important factors in competition. The draw area attributed to supermarkets is inconsistent with the evidence presented by the Assistant Operation Manager and Director of Von, W. D. Hayden. It is also inconsistent with the Court's opinion.

The statement that discount houses are "expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantial additional competitive force" is the wildest kind of speculation. The language used throughout this paragraph is vague.

Paragraph 63. This proposed finding is unsupported by the evidence and is meaningless. Officials of Von and Shopping Bag testified that so-called "bantam" stores are merely small grocery stores like "Mom and Pop's." The record clearly indicates that the larger stores are becoming increasingly more important and that the "Mom and Pop's" are being eliminated. Reference to "an increasing number" of bantam stores is vague.

Paragraph 64. This proposed finding is not supported by the evidence. The evidence demonstrates milk depots are a de minimis factor in the industry. They only handle a limited line of groceries and do not deal in the stipulated line of commerce, viz., groceries and related products.

Paragraph 65. This proposed finding is not supported by the evidence. They do not deal in the stipulated line of commerce, viz., groceries and related products. Furthermore, this proposed finding is vague in its referrals to "increasing" amounts of products. The second sentence of this finding is meaningless.

Paragraphs 66 through 73. These proposed findings are objectionable as findings of fact in that they consist of legal and factual conclusions which are unsupported by the record.

Paragraph 74. This proposed finding is objectionable in that it is incomplete, misleading and contrary to the Court's opinion. A true measure of market share is dollar volume and not the number of stores. This type of finding equates a $30,000 grocery store with a $3 million grocery store. In the Court's opinion at page 8 the combined chain has a market share of 8.9%.

Paragraph 75. This proposed finding is objectionable because it ignores the market share statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion. Furthermore, reference to food store sales is inconsistent with the stipulated line of commerce, viz., groceries and related products.

Paragraph 76. This proposed finding is objectionable because it ignores the market share statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion.

It is also objectionable because it contains factual conclusions not supported by the record. There are no complete 1960 sales figures in the record and there are no sales figures since that time.

Paragraph 77. This proposed finding is objectionable because it ignores the market share statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion and introduces irrelevant statistics referring to sales outside of the section of the country established in the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order. It is also misleading to refer to Von's as a local concern.

Paragraph 78. This proposed finding introduces irrelevant sales figures from outside of the relevant section of the country.

Paragraph 80. This proposed finding is objectionable because it is misleading, incomplete and argumentative in that it relies on excerpts from Exhibit 8 in Evidence. Exhibit 8 shows, in percentage form, concentration in the 4, 8, 12, 16 and 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area both before and after the Von's-Shopping Bag merger, based on 1958 sales. Concentration in each of these categories increased as a result of the Von-Shopping Bag merger as follows:

	Before Merger	After Merger
20 largest chains	56.9%	57.4%
16 largest chains	53.4	54.2
12 largest chains	48.8	50.0
8 largest chains	40.9	44.0
4 largest chains	24.4	28.8

(See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraph 81. This proposed finding is objectionable because it ignores the market share statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion. Parts of this proposed finding are argumentative, conclusory and not supported by evidence in the record. The evidence clearly demonstrates that of the chains listed which "were not in existence" in 1948, Food Giant, Fox, Hughes, Yor-Way and McCoy's, all either entered or expanded in the market as a direct result of acquisitions or mergers.

Paragraph 82. This proposed finding is objectionable because it contains conclusions of fact and law which are not supported by the evidence. It is also objectionable because it ignores the market share statistics found by the Court in its memorandum opinion.

Parts of the finding are also objectionable because they stress the openings of stores and ignore closings.

In (d) the reference to "only slightly more than half" of a 2½ billion dollar market is misleading.

It is suggested that the Court adopt the following table which is taken from Exhibit 7, instead of the argumentative findings proposed by the defendants:

Changes in Concentration in the 4, 8, 12, 16 and 20 Largest Grocery Chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area

	1948	1958
4 largest chains	25.9%	24.4%
8 largest chains	33.7	40.9
12 largest chains	38.8	48.8
16 largest chains	41.6	53.4
20 largest chains	43.8	56.9

Paragraph 83. This proposed finding is augumentative in that it makes light of the history of mergers and acquisitions in the area (See recommended changes, III, infra).

Paragraphs 84 and 85. These proposed findings are objectionable because they state legal and factual conclusions which are not supported by the record.

III. Proposed Language Changes

In an effort to eliminate some of the specific objections set forth above, the Government suggests that the Court might want to consider the following language changes. In making these suggestions we in no way waive our general or specific objections to paragraphs of the proposed findings as to which no language change is suggested herein. We also reserve all rights under Rules 52(b) and 59 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

In accord with the foregoing it is suggested that the Court consider the following language in place of specific paragraphs as numbered by the defendants.

Paragraphs 1 through 10

1. Defendant Von's Grocery Co. (hereinafter referred to as Von) is a publicly held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware. At the time the complaint was filed it maintained its principal offices in Los Angeles, California. Subsequent to the merger, Von has moved its offices to the former Shopping Bag headquarters at El Monte, California.*

2. Von is one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. It is the successor of incorporated and unincorporated businesses which have been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products since 1932.*

3. In the 1959 fiscal year, Von operated 28 complete supermarkets in the Los Angeles area which had total annual sales of approximately $85 million for an average of approximately $3 million in sales per store. All of the Von supermarkets are of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.*

4. Prior to the merger, Von also owned and operated a modern distribution center in a 216,000 square foot building located on a 20 acre tract of land in the Los Angeles area. Direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute groceries and related products to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area. Von owned and operated approximately 33 tractors and 39 trailers which it used for transporting merchandise from the distribution center to the various supermarkets.*

5. Subsequent to the merger Von sold its distribution center to a competitor and now uses the former Shopping Bag distribution center.*

6. Prior to March 28, 1960, defendant Shopping Bag Food Stores (hereinafter referred to as Shopping Bag) was a publicly held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California and maintained its principal offices in El Monte, California. On March 28, 1960, Shopping Bag was merged into Von and the separate corporate existence of Shopping Bag was terminated on that date.*

7. Prior to its merger into Von, Shopping Bag was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. It was the successor to incorporated and unincorporated business entities which had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area since 1933. In the 1959 fiscal year, Shopping Bag operated 38 complete supermarkets in the Los Angeles area which had total annual sales of approximately $84 million for an average of approximately $2.1 million in sales per store. All of the Shopping Bag stores were of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.*

8. Immediately prior to the merger, Shopping Bag also operated a substantial distribution center which was served directly by railroad and truck, and which received and distributed groceries and related products to Shopping Bag supermarkets. To facilitate distribution to its supermarkets Shopping Bag owned and operated a fleet of trucks, trailers, and automobiles comprising about 166 units in all.*

9. The following table shows total dollar sales and number of stores operated by Von and Shopping Bag in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area for the years 1948, 1954 and 1958:

	Von		Shopping Bag
	No. of Stores	Total Sales	No. of Stores	Total Sales
1948.....	14	$21,794,000	15	$11,396,000
1954.....	19	63,730,000	23	52,444,000
1958.....	27	93,703,000	34	84,164,000

10. Before the merger, Von's percentage of total dollar sales was 4.7%, while Shopping Bag's was 4.2%. Combined, they represent 8.9% of the total dollar sales in the metropolitan area. The following table shows the industry rank and share of the total grocery sales of the 10 leading chains in the area in 1958:

Fox Markets	9	8	56,438,000	2.8
Mayfair	10	9	39,360,000	2.0
			Total	43.6

The following table compares the same chain in terms of total number of stores operated in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1958 and average dollar sales per store:

Chain	No. of Stores	Average Sale per Store
Combined Von and Shopping Bag	61	$2,910,000
Safeway	154	1,040,000
Ralph's	38	3,370,000
Von	27	3,650,000
Market Basket	39	2,280,000
Thriftimart	43	2,060,000
Shopping Bag	34	2,480,000
Food Giant	18	4,040,000
Alpha Beta	48	1,260,000
Fox	34	1,660,000
Mayfair	28	1,400,000

Paragraph 11

11. On March 28, 1960 Shopping Bag was merged into Von. Shopping Bag shareholders received Von's stock in return for their Shopping Bag stock. As a result of the merger Von and Shopping Bag were united under a single management, subject to the control of a single board of directors and a single group of officers. Their warehousing functions are united in a single operation. They have a single purchasing organization. Their advertising is consolidated under the name Von-Shopping Bag. The search for new locations is now the responsibility of one organization instead of two. The inventory in the chains has been adjusted with the result that both chains now carry the same lines and sell at the same prices.

Paragraphs 14 and 15

14. Groceries and related products taken as a whole is the relevant line of commerce for determining whether this merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Groceries and related products consist of, but are not limited to, the following: groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs and sundries. They are the products taken as a whole which are generally distributed to the public by grocery stores and supermarkets. Taken as a whole these products have peculiar characteristics and uses in the operation of retail grocery stores which make them distinguishable from all other products.

15. The relevant trade area in which the defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Combined Los Angeles County and Orange County have also been defined by the Bureau of the Census as the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area since, taken together, they meet the tests set by the Department of Commerce in terms of population and commercial interchange. Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income, and retail dollar sales. Approximately 6,750,000 persons reside in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and total retail sales in the area were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957. The Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is the area of effective competition in the instant case. It is more than a community. It is an appreciable trade area and a relevant section of the country for determining the effect of this language within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

Paragraph 40

40. Competition in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1960 was a contest for the patronage of the 6,750,000 consumers residing in that area. Prior to the merger each of the two defendants were part of this competition which consisted of the following activities:

---

 These proposed findings combine verbatim passages taken from the Court's Pre-trial Conference Order of April 24, 1961, as amended.

(a) Competition to purchase groceries and related products on better terms than other firms;

(b) Competition in the operation of warehouses and distribution centers;

(c) Competition in the maintenance and operation of fleets of trucks, trailers, and automobiles to facilitate the distribution of groceries and related products from warehouses and distribution centers to supermarkets located throughout the area;

(d) Competition in inventory control;

(e) Competition in area wide television and radio advertising;

(f) Competition in metropolitan and neighborhood newspaper advertising;

(g) Competition in establishing and promoting the chain's brand names;

(h) Competition to secure a reputation for selling a wide line of groceries and related products at acceptable prices, in appealing stores with adequate parking space;

(i) Competition to increase the sale of groceries and related products and to secure other selling advantages over one another;

(j) Competition to obtain a reputation for purchasing, curing, distributing, and selling the best grade of meat at competitive prices;

(k) Competition to secure a reputation for purchasing, distributing and selling the best grade of produce and fresh vegetables at a competitive price;

(l) Competition to draw customers from wide trading areas;

(m) Competition to establish a consumer image which will be of advantage in opening stores in newly developed areas;

(n) Competition to secure new store locations in existing and newly developed areas;

(o) Competition to secure a reputation for financial solvency and consumer acceptance which will enable it to secure store locations in desirable new shopping centers;

(p) Competition to secure, train and keep efficient and courteous personnel; and

(q) Competition in all other advertising, promotional and business activities.

Paragraph 41

41. Customers of supermarkets take various things into consideration in choosing a market at which to shop, including the following: price, general appearance of the store, size, variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free-standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, courteous service and cleanliness of the store. The average customer is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about 4 miles, to shop. Shoppers are willing to pass by other stores in order to go to a specific store which they believe will meet their top demands. Von-Shopping Bag considers the draw area of their stores to be five miles.

Paragraph 42

42. Prior to the merger, the twenty leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and as such each of these chains competed with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As a part of the general competition, the major chains as well as other grocers frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains. In addition to the general competition between the chains, there was also intensive competition between individual Von and Shopping Bag stores in those instances where a store of each company was so located that both could compete for some of the same customers.

Paragraph 48

48. The following table shows grocery store openings and closings in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area for the calendar year 1960 by single outlet and multiple outlet operators:

Multiple Outlet	Single Outlet
119 Openings	128 Openings
42 Closings	260 Closings
77 Net Gain	132 Net Loss

Paragraph 54

54. In 1960 Von was operating or in the process of opening the following stores:

Store #	Address
1	11471 Long Beach Blvd., Lynwood
4	2280 Atlantic Blvd., Monterey Park
5	10001 Paramount Blvd., Downey

40	1201 W. Whittier, Montebello
42	Corner of San Fernando Mission Rd., and Balboa, Granada Hills

On the basis of the average 10 minute driving time or 4 mile average driving distance each of the Von stores listed above was so located that it could compete for some of the same customers with one or more of the Shopping Bag stores listed above. Each of the Shopping Bag stores was so located that it could compete for some of the same customers with one or more Von stores. As of 1960 census data 1,058,000 persons lived in areas that were accessible to both Von's and Shopping Bag's stores, as listed above. These persons accounted for annual grocery expenditures of approximately four hundred eighty-one and a half million dollars.

Paragraph 60

60. The following table shows the openings of grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1960:

Frequency Distribution by Annual Sales

	Under $500,000	$500,000 to $1,000,000	$1,000,000 to $1,500,000	$1,500,000 to $2,000,000	Over $2,000,000	Total
Ten Largest	1	17	6	3	18	45
Next Ten	1	9	3	2	7	22
Remaining Multiple Outlets	28	12	5	5	2	52
Total Multiple Outlets	30	38	14	10	27	119
Single Outlets	118	4	2	1	2	127
Total	148	42	16	11	29	246

The following table shows the number of grocery stores obtaining grocery permits in 1960 which discontinued them by November 15, 1961:

	Ten Largest Chains	Next Ten Largest Chains	Other Multiple Outlets	All Multiple Outlets	Single Outlest	Total
Obtaining permits	45	22	52	119	127	246
Discontinuing permits	5	5	18	28	53	81
Retaining their original permits	40	17	34	91	74	165

The following table shows the dollar and percentage distribution of annual sales of grocery stores opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1960:

Ten Largest Chains	Next Ten	Remaining Multiple Outlets	Total Multiple Outlets	Single Outlets	Total
$73,681	$33,519	$32,290	$139,490	$18,321	$157,811
46.6%	21.2%	20.4%	88.3% *	11.6%	100.0% *

* Does not equal the sum of its components because of rounding.

Paragraph 80

80. Concentration in the 4, 8, 12, 16 and 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, both before and after the Von-Shopping Bag merger, based on 1958 sales, was as follows:

	Before Merger	After Merger
20 largest chains	56.9%	57.4%
16 largest chains	53.4	54.2
12 largest chains	48.8	50.0
8 largest chains	40.9	44.0
4 largest chains	24.4	28.8

Paragraph 83

83. The following acquisitions and mergers occurred in the period 1953 through 1961:

Year	Acquired Firm	Acquiring Firm	No. of Stores Acquired
1957	Bi-Right & Big Bear	Piper Mart	3
1958	Bob's Supermarket	Mayfair	7
1961	Border's Markets	Better Foods	3
1954	Carty Brothers	Kory's Markets	8
1958	Clark Markets	Food Giant	10
1956	Desert Fair	Fox	4
1959	Hiram's	Lucky	6
1958	Iowa Pork Shops	Fox	11
1957	Jim Dandy Mkts.	Lucky	9
1961	McDaniel's Markets	Food Giant (and others)	16
1957	Panorama Markets	Food Giant	3
1958	Patton's Mkts.	Pix	4
1958	Raisin Markets	Alpha Beta	13
1960	Rankins Markets	Piggly Wiggly	4
1959	S & K Markets	Pix	2
1960	Shopping Bag	Von's	37
1959	Shop Right Markets	Pix	3
1958	C. S. Smith	Yor-Way	5
1957	Toluca Marts	Food Giant	2
1957	U-Tell-Em Markets	Mayfair	10
	Total		160

In the period 1948 through 1958, 9 of the 20 leading chains acquired 126 grocery stores from concerns outside the top 20 chains and in 1958 ninety-nine of the acquired stores were still operated by the acquired chains and had sales of $192.9 million. Without the sales of the acquired stores, the market share of these same 20 top chains in 1958 would drop from 56.9% to 47.3%.

Conclusion

In concluding, we respectfully submit that findings of the type proposed by the defendants are of little or no assistance to the Court under Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As stated by the Supreme Court in United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., supra, at pp. 656-657, n. 4:

> These lawyers, and properly so, in their zeal and advocacy and their enthusiasm are going to state the case for their side in these findings as strongly as they possibly can. When these findings get to the court of appeals they won't be worth the paper they are written on as far as assisting the court of appeals in determining why the Judge decided the case.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Civil No. 336-60-CC

[Title omitted]

REPLY TO THE GOVERNMENT'S OBJECTIONS TO THE REVISED SET OF PROPOSED FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—Filed December 4, 1964.

I. Preliminary Statement

This Court has previously advised the parties that it wanted the findings of fact to be "complete, full and correct." (Transcript, June 14, 1963, p. 308.) In the preparation of the findings we endeavored to comply fully with the direction of the Court. It is apparent that this Court carefully reviewed the proposed findings and the Government's objections thereto for it accorded the parties an informal conference and indicated the primary areas in which the proposed findings seemed objectionable. As a consequence of that conference the submitted findings were revised so as to delete completely proposed findings 3, 14, 44, 47, 49, 50, 66, 72, 79, 82 and additional deletions and changes were made in proposed findings 11 (now 10), 13 (now 12), 15 (now 13), 23 (now 21), 24 (now 22), 25 (now 23), 30 (now 28), 32 (now 30), 36 (now 34), 38 (now 36), 39 (now 37), 42 (now 40), 48 (now 44), 51 (now 45), 52 (now 46), 54 (now 49), 57 (now 52), 58 (now 53), 59 (now 54), 60 (now 55), 61 (now 56), 69 (now 63), 70 (now 64), 75 (now 68), 80 (now 72), 91 (now 82), 92 (now 83), 93 (now 84), and 96 (now 87) so as to eliminate much prolixity and argumentative language.

In the El Paso case, 376 U.S. 651, the Supreme Court noted that the trial judge had written no opinion and it had signed without change, mechanically adopting the 130 findings of fact and one conclusion of law proposed by the prevailing party, and it noted with approval the statement of Judge J. Skelly Wright of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia that the trial judge should "avoid as far as you possibly can simply signing what some lawyer puts under your nose. Those lawyers, and properly so, in their zeal and advocacy and their enthusiasm are going to state the case for their side in these findings as strongly as they possibly can. * * *"

The procedure followed in the case at bar is in direct contrast to that in the El Paso case. The Court has written a comprehensive opinion and it certainly did not "mechanically adopt" the proposed findings. This Court suggested substantial changes therein, which were made. Nevertheless we are met with another, almost vitriolic, attack thereon by the Government, including an attack on findings taken almost verbatim from the opinion of the Court. For example, the Court's opinion (p. 16, lines 14-18) states "As between stores, only a few of those of Von's and Shopping Bag were in direct competition since generally each company's stores were in different localities of the area. A few did compete directly." The Government's Objections to paragraphs 4, 10 and 12(a) which connect the subsidiary findings with the Court's ultimate determination is a direct attack on the opinion of the Court. In its opinion (p. 14, lines 8 to 11) the Court stated, "Another group now participating in the distribution of groceries is the discount house. The evidence indicates that this phase is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantially additional competitive force." The Government objects to the incorporation in proposed finding 62 of this language, and says as to this language it "is the wildest kind of speculation." (Objections, p. 16.) A further example, of the many that might be cited, is the Government's attack (p. 11) on proposed finding 39 and the testimony of Campbell Stewart—contrast this with the "considerable weight" which the Court's opinion (pp. 14-15) states should be accorded to the testimony of Campbell Stewart.

We respectfully suggest that detailed findings may be desirable in order to cover all possible disputed issues of fact and to state the subsidiary findings which support the Court's findings of ultimate facts.

In the Brown Shoe case (370 U.S. at p. 322, footnote 38) the Court stated that in addition to statistics showing market shares, "only a further examination of the particular market—its structure, history and probable future —can provide the appropriate setting for judging the probable anticompetitive effect of the merger." And in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 12 L.ed.2d 775 at 789, the Supreme Court enumerated some of the criteria which the trial court might take into account, including: "the number and power of the competitors in the relevant market; the background of their growth; the power of the joint venturers; * * * the competition existing between them * * *; the setting in which the joint venture was created; the reasons and necessities for its existence; * * *." We have attempted in the revised proposed findings to cover the relevant factors in keeping with the Court's direction that the findings be "complete, full and correct."

II. Should the Opinion Alone Constitute the Findings Under Rule 52(a)?

Although the opinion is comprehensive and detailed, it might be contended by the Government that standing alone it does not meet the requirement of a finding on every material issue, including relevant subsidiary issues, and state separately its conclusions thereon. (Cf. Kruger v. Purcell, 300 F.2d 830, 831 [3 Cir. 1962]; Brooks Bros. v. Brook's Clothing of California, Limited, 5 F.R.D. 14, 16 (S.D. Cal. 1945, opinion by Judge Yankwich); Commissioner v. Duberstein, 363 U.S. 278, 292.)

For example, the Court's opinion (p. 16, lines 14-18) specifically finds that "As between stores, only a few of those of Von's and Shopping Bag were in direct competition since generally each company's stores were in different localities of the area. A few did compete directly." We suggest that the specific subsidiary finding proposed in finding 40, which indicates that the draw area of particular stores varies and that in some localities natural or man-made barriers, such as hills, freeways, railroad tracks, and the like, will limit a store's draw area, is a proper subsidiary finding to support the ultimate determination. Thus the Government in its Objections (pp. 27 and 28) has seized upon a reference to evidence given by Dr. Jenssen in order to create a conflict with the positive and unequivocal finding of the Court that only a few of the stores of Von's and Shopping Bag were in direct competition.

Such a misconstruction of the opinion would be precluded by specific findings.

Conclusion

We are of the view that the procedure followed in this case is comparable to that discussed by the Seventh Circuit in the case of In re Woodmar Realty Company, 307 F.2d 591 (7th Cir. 1962), wherein after writing three opinions the trial judge directed plaintiffs' attorneys to submit proposed findings and conclusions in accordance with those opinions, and the Seventh Circuit commented:

> "• • • The record discloses an unusually full hearing by a thorough, painstaking judge. By having the prevailing party submit proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, the judge followed a practical and wise custom in which the prevailing party has 'an obligation to a busy court to assist it in performance of its duty' under Rule 52(a). Dearborn Nat. Cas. Co. v. Consumers Petroleum Co., 7 Cir., 164 F.2d 332, 333 (1947)." (307 F.2d at 593-94.)

We have endeavored to be of assistance to the Court in the preparation of the proposed findings. The Court has been of great assistance to us in indicating a number of the initially proposed findings which it found prolix, argumentative, or otherwise objectionable. We have conscientiously endeavored to comply with the Court's preliminary suggestions. We suggest that the present Government Objections are simply an attempt to relitigate the action and that the opinion of the Court and its conscientious review and criticism of the findings heretofore submitted distinguish this case from United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Company, 376 U.S. 651.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, Defendants

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—Entered December 17, 1964

The above-entitled matter having come on regularly for trial on June 11, 1963 before the Honorable Charles Carr, Judge of the above-entitled Court; plaintiff United States of America being represented by James J. Coyle, John F. Hughes and Malcolm F. Knight, and defendants being represented by Johnson, Bates & Sheffield, by James E. Bates, and O'Melveny & Myers, by William W. Alsup and William W. Vaughn; and evidence, both oral and documentary, having been received; and the matter having been reopened on March 23, 1964 for the taking of further evidence and for oral argument; whereupon the case was submitted for decision;

Now, Therefore, the Court, being fully advised in the premises, does hereby make the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

Findings of Fact

1. As of March 25, 1960, when this action was commenced, defendant Von's Grocery Co. (hereinafter Von's) operated 28 grocery stores, all of which were located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, and Von's was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

2. Von's is a Delaware corporation and is the successor to a family partnership which entered the retail grocery business in 1932 by undertaking to operate the grocery concession in a small grocery store in the City of Lynwood, Los Angeles County, California.

3. Thereafter, Von's opened other stores until in 1948 it was operating 14 grocery stores whose total sales were approximately $21,794,000. In 1954, Von's had 19 stores and sales of $63,730,000. In 1958, it had 27 stores and a sales volume of approximately $93,703,000. This amounted to approximately 4.7% of total grocery store sales and 4.2% of totai food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, meaning that in terms of sales Von's ranked third among all grocery concerns operating in those two counties. Both Safeway and Ralphs had greater sales. In terms of number of stores, Von's ranked eighth behind Safeway (154 stores), Alpha Beta (48 stores), Thriftimart (43 stores), Market Basket (39 stores), Shopping Bag (34 stores), Ralph's (34 stores), and Fox (34 stores). In 1959 Von's had 28 stores and sales of approximately $86,606,000, or an average of approximately $3,000,000 in sales per store. The Von's supermarkets are of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.

4. For the most part, Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

5. Von's also owned and operated a modern distribution center; direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute the groceries to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area. After the merger with Shopping Bag hereinafter described, Von's sold its distribution center to a competitor and has since used the former Shopping Bag distribution center.

6. As of March 25, 1960, Shopping Bag Food Stores (hereinafter Shopping Bag) was a California corporation operating 36 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, and two grocery stores in San Bernardino County, California. Shopping Bag was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

7. Shopping Bag was the successor to a partnership consisting of W. R. Hayden and W. B. Rorex, which began business in 1930 with the operation of a grocery concession in a small grocery store in Los Angeles County. The partnership commenced operating a grocery concession in a second store in 1931. It added two more grocery concessions in 1932 and two more in 1933. In that year the partnership was dissolved and a corporation, Shopping Bag Markets, formed to succeed it. In 1947, the corporation's name was changed to Shopping Bag Food Stores.

8. By 1945, Shopping Bag had 12 stores and was operating all the concessions in them. In that year, W. D. Rorex retired and thereafter the majority of the stock in Shopping Bag was owned by W. R. Hayden and his family.

9. Shopping Bag continued to expand its business. In 1948, Shopping Bag had 15 stores and sales of approximately $11,396,000. In 1954, it had 23 stores and sales of approximately $52,444,000. In 1958, it had 36 stores and approximately $90,531,000 in sales. Two of these stores were in San Bernardino County. The remaining 34 in Los Angeles and Orange Counties had sales of approximately $84,164,000 in 1958. This gave Shopping Bag approximately 4.2% of total grocery store sales and 3.8% of total food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, meaning that Shopping Bag ranked sixth in terms of sales behind Safeway, Ralphs, Von's, Market Basket and Thriftimart, and fifth in number of stores (see Finding 3). In 1959, with 38 stores (two of which were outside the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area), Shopping Bag had sales of approximately $84,404,000, or an average of $2,100,000 sales per store; all of its stores were of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.

10. For the most part, Shopping Bag stores were located in the northern and eastern portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

11. On March 28, 1960, Shopping Bag was merged into Von's. Shopping Bag shareholders received Von's stock in return for their Shopping Bag stock.

12. Many of the factors which affected the officers and directors in consummating the merger of the two corporations were:

(a) The operations of the two chains complemented each other with little overlap in the geographical areas each served.

(b) Prior to the merger, W. R. Hayden was the most actively responsible officer and stockholder carrying on the affairs of Shopping Bag's business. The management of the company was in his hands and he was assisted by only a few other executives. By 1959 it was apparent that Shopping Bag's earnings and profits were declining, even though its sales were increasing. This was a matter of grave concern to Shopping Bag and to its president and principal stockholder, Mr. Hayden. The following table shows Shopping Bag's total sales, net income, percentage of net income to total sales and percentage of net profit after taxes to total assets for the years 1957, 1958 and 1959. For purposes of comparison, the same fiscal information for Von's is also set forth:

Shopping Bag

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Profit to Total Assets
1957	$87,007,857	$1,360,986	1.6%	6.6%
1958	90,531,209	912,851	1.0%	3.9%
*1959	84,403,866	770,122	.9%	3.2%

* A four-week strike in January 1959, resulted in lower sales for each company in that year.

Von's

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Profit to Total Assets
1957	$89,990,056	$1,872,943	2.1%	12.7%
1958	94,483,993	1,947,367	2.1%	12.4%
*1959	86,605,829	1,981,358	2.3%	10.8%

* A four-week strike in January 1959, resulted in lower sales for each company in that year.

(c) After more than 30 years in the grocery business, Mr. Hayden wanted to become less active but he was concerned about what would happen to Shopping Bag if he were to do so because Shopping Bag did not have a strong management staff to take over his responsibilities. Von's had a superior organization and a management team which was capable of operating a chain of 60 or 70 stores.

(d) It was anticipated that (and this has proved to be the case) the merger would result in greater efficiency and lower operating costs for the two companies combined than they could have achieved otherwise.

Savings would be realized primarily in overhead, general and administrative, advertising, warehousing, and distribution expenses.

(e) Prior to the merger, the Von der Ahe family owned 80% of Von's stock and the Hayden family held 60% of Shopping Bag's stock. It was recognized that the death of any member of either family who held a large number of these shares might create estate tax problems requiring the forced sale of stock in order to meet death taxes. The merger gave Von's 5,344 public stockholders and a much broader and more active market for its stock. By reason of the merger, Von's was able to meet the listing qualifications of the New York Stock Exchange and, accordingly, Von's stock was listed on that Exchange in 1961. The merger has resulted in a more favorable market atmosphere for the disposal of stock by either the Von der Ahe or Hayden families.

13. Shopping Bag had expanded rapidly through internal growth. However, it suffered from a shortage of qualified executive personnel.

14. The parties have agreed and the Court finds that the relevant line of commerce in this case is groceries and related products taken as a whole. These are the products usually and customarily offered for sale in supermarkets and grocery stores, and consist of groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs and sundries; in 1959 the sale of food products accounted for 90% of all sales by grocery stores in the area.

15. The parties have agreed and the Court finds that the relevant section of the country in this case is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, which is defined as Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California. Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income and retail dollar sales; approximately 6,750,000 persons resided in the area and total retail sales were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957. The Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is an appreciable trade area and a section of the country within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act; sales of groceries in the area approximate $2,500,000,000 annually.

16. The plaintiff made no attempt to predicate its case upon the basis that suppliers had been eliminated or adversely affected by the merger.

17. In the 1920's and 1930's, the grocery business in Los Angeles was being conducted from small, corner grocery stores. In these stores, usually one man or one company would operate the grocery concession or department, another the meat concession, another the produce concession, and so on. Sales in a typical store of this character were from $2,000 to $2,500 a week. Few housewives had automobiles at their disposal during the day. Consequently, they usually had to walk to the grocery store where they did their shopping. This meant that the area from which the typical store drew most of its customers was limited to a block or two in any direction and if a particular grocery store happened to be the only one in its immediate neighborhood, it had a virtual monopoly of local trade. In the 1920's there were a number of "chains" doing business in Los Angeles. They included Piggly Wiggly, E. A. Morrison, Humpty Dumpty, Crown Emporium, Ralphs, and Von's (a company then owned by Charles A. Von der Ahe, the father of the men who started and still operate the present Von's). These chains operated from 10 to 90 grocery concessions in small grocery stores. In addition, there were a number of smaller concerns operating less than ten grocery concessions as well as many who operated only one concession.

18. Between 1927 and 1929, MacMarr Stores acquired the then Von's, E. A. Morrison, Humpty Dumpty, Crown Emporium and other chains in Los Angeles. Later, Safeway Stores acquired Piggly Wiggly, and in 1931, Safeway acquired MacMarr. This gave Safeway over 1,000 stores in the Los Angeles area.

19. During the 1930's, Safeway was the leading chain in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. Ralphs was also operating a successful chain. Concerns which were later to become larger, such as the present Von's, Shopping Bag, Market Basket, Thriftimart or their predecessors, started with one store in or about 1932.

20. Starting in the late 1930's, the concept of a grocery store being divided up into concessions or departments operated under separate ownerships began to undergo a change. Certain concerns commenced to operate all departments in their stores.

21. In the early 1940's, another change in grocery retailing began to take place—a trend toward larger stores, called supermarkets, which offered a greater number and variety of products. Automobiles were more widely owned in the 1940's and many people chose to drive to the grocery store, meaning that it was desirable for a store to provide parking facilities. Many of the new supermarkets had parking lots. In view of their larger size, parking facilities and other attractions, supermarkets began drawing customers from a wider area than had the grocery stores of the 1920's and 1930's.

22. During World War II, there was a building moratorium, but as soon as the war was over, many new supermarkets were constructed in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, keeping pace with the population explosion which this area was experiencing.

23. The change in the number of stores in the area is indicated by the following computations in which the word "multiple" means units of two or more stores operated by one concern:

	January 1, 1950	January 1, 1961	January 1, 1963
Single	5,365	3,818	3,590
Multiple	856	923	958
Total	6,221	4,741	4,548

The foregoing figures appear to be the most reliable which could be obtained.

24. The following are some of the reasons for the decline in the number of stores in the period January 1, 1950 to January 1, 1963:

(a) The development of the supermarket and the shopping centers led to a decrease of the number of small neighborhood grocery stores of both single store operators and the chains;

(b) The shift in population, the shift in transportation from street cars to automobiles and the many changes in merchandising methods which effected the change to the supermarket era;

(c) Failures of some of the local chains and single store operators;

(d) Closings to move to better locations;

(e) Failures due to lack of experience in the grocery business (although it was impossible to arrive at the number of failures in this category);

(f) Closings because of the construction of the freeway system (and while the number must have been substantial it was impossible to determine the number of such closings);

(g) Many people seemed to prefer the supermarket with its greater variety of products, greater parking convenience, better service, more modern appearance, and the like;

(h) The supermarket, being larger in size, could serve the same number of people as two or three of the older, smaller stores, and hence a fewer number of stores were needed.

25. In 1948, Safeway operated a large number of stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and had sales amounting to 14.2% of total grocery store sales in the area. Ralphs had 32 stores and 6.9% of the area's total grocery store sales. No other concern had as many as 30 stores or as much as 3% of the area's total grocery store sales. For example, Mayfair had 22 stores and 2.4% of the total grocery store sales in the market. Market Basket had 26 stores and 2.2% of the market. Von's had 14 stores and 2.4% of the market. Shopping Bag had 15 stores and 1.2% of the market.

26. The 1950's were characterized by vigorous competition. Population continued to increase and so did the construction of new grocery outlets. Despite the decline in number of stores referred to in Finding 22 above, the evidence showed that there is scarcely a single household in Los Angeles and Orange Counties which does not have a choice of from three to ten competing grocery stores within convenient shopping distance.

27. The 1950's were also characterized by the entry into the market of new concerns and the growth of existing smaller concerns. The market leaders, Safeway and Ralphs, were not able to maintain their preexisting share of the total grocery store sales in the face of this increased competition. For example:

(a) In 1948, Safeway and Ralphs together had total sales in the area of approximately $193.5 million. This represented 21.1% of all grocery stores sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In 1958, Safeway and Ralphs had combined sales of nearly $288 million but their combined share of the total grocery store business had declined to 14.3%. Safeway's percentage market share declined from 14.2% to 8% in this period and Ralphs from 6.9% to 6.4%. Thus, despite the fact that these two leaders had increased their respective sales in ten years, they nevertheless lost ground in terms of share of the market to other concerns.

(b) This loss of market position is attributable to the success and growth of smaller concerns. In 1953, there were 96 concerns operating two or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. By 1962, there were 150 such concerns operating a total of 1,085 stores. The greatest increase in number of competitors occurred in the case of concerns operating two or three stores. In 1953, there were 56 of them. In 1962, there were 104, an increase of 86%. In addition, in 1962 there were 22 concerns with from four to nine stores each, and 24 concerns (including Safeway and Ralphs) with 10 or more stores each. Seven of the 24 concerns with 10 or more stores in 1962 opened their second market sometime after 1953. Moreover, as of the end of 1961 there were approximately 3,800 single store operators doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

28. The opportunities for entry, success and growth of smaller concerns can be illustrated by examples of some of the grocery businesses which have been started or have experienced growth since 1950:

(a) Hughes Markets—Joseph P. Hughes left the employ of Thirftimart in 1952 and opened the first Hughes Market. By 1958, Hughes had opened six more new stores and the company's annual sales exceeded $21 million. By 1963, Hughes had a total of 13 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

(b) Shoppers Markets—Shoppers Markets started with one store in 1942. In 1949 it added its second store. It opened another in 1950, another in 1952, another in 1956, three in 1958, four more in 1961 and another in 1962. Today Shoppers is a 14-store chain.

(c) Pantry Food Markets—For 21 years, Ted R. Wood was an employee of Alpha Beta. In 1954, Mr. Wood left Alpha Beta to start his own business. He and seven others invested their savings, a total of $48,000, in a grocery store in Pasadena which was opened for business in March, 1955. This was the beginning of Pantry Food Markets. Another store was opened in July, 1955. A third store was added in 1956, a fourth in 1957, and a fifth in 1958. Between June, 1959 and December, 1961, Pantry opened five new stores, bringing its total to 10.

(d) Food Giant — In 1954, Food Giant had two stores. By 1958 it had 19. In 1960 it had 29. By October, 1962, it had grown to a 53-store chain and by February, 1963, it had opened six additional stores, giving it a total of 59. Some of Food Giant's stores were acquired from other companies, but most of them were new supermarkets opened for the first time by Food Giant.

(e) The Boys Markets—The first Boys Market was opened in the 1920's. The company slowly expanded to a nine-store chain in 1958. By 1963, it was operating 25 stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

(f) Michael's Markets—Prior to 1960, Joe B. Goodnight was an employee of Alpha Beta. He left his position with that concern to open the first Michael's Market on July 28, 1960. By October, 1962, Michael's Markets was operating a chain of seven supermarkets in Orange County.

(g) Gelson's Markets—Eugene and Bernard Gelson started in business in 1946 by purchasing a 700 square foot market in North Hollywood for $5,000, their combined savings at the time. By 1962, the Gelsons had built and were operating two of the largest supermarkets in Los Angeles County. One of them, located in Burbank, is 26,000 square feet in size. It was opened in 1951. The other, opened in Encino in March, 1960, has 37,000 square feet and enjoys annual sales of approximately $6,000,000.

29. A history of the retail grocery business in Los Angeles would be incomplete without reference to the significance of cooperative buying. In 1922, fifteen of the smaller grocery retailers concluded that they could more effectively compete against some of the chains then doing business in Los Angeles and that they should take action to become more competitive. They were having difficulty competing effectively because those chains could buy their groceries directly from suppliers in large enough quantities to afford them quantity discounts, while the operator of one or two stores had to purchase groceries in smaller quantities and at higher prices from wholesalers; as a result chain stores could profitably sell their merchandise at prices which were sometimes lower than the prices which the small retailer paid his wholesaler for the same merchandise. Accordingly, these fifteen grocers decided to pool their resources and buy their groceries directly from suppliers through one common warehouse. This afforded them the same advantages of direct buying and quantity discounts which the larger chains enjoyed.

30. This method of purchasing proved successful. In 1924, a corporation named Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. was formed to carry on the cooperative buying of groceries. This corporation was and still is wholly owned by the grocery retailers who buy through it. Certified buys in large quantities at favorable prices, warehouses its grocery products and then distributes them to its stockholders (called "members") who are its only customers.

31. Today, Certified is the largest retailer-owned food wholesaler in the United States. Its membership consists of 873 retail grocery concerns which operate approximately 1,557 retail stores. In addition, Certified's wholly-owned subsidiary, Spartan Grocers, has 1200 members who operate 1255 stores. Most of Certified's and Spartan's members do business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, although Certified does serve some members in other parts of Southern California as well as in Arizona, Nevada and elsewhere.

32. Certified handles more than 13,000 items, consisting of dry groceries, frozen foods, delicatessen products and certain non-food products such as health and beauty aids, housewares and appliances. Certified deals primarily in branded items but does have certain products available under its private label, Springfield. By reason of the large volume in which Certified makes its purchases, its members can buy these products through Certified on a competitive basis with the larger chains. Some of the larger chains buy their grocery products through Certified.

33. Certified operates one warehouse which is 535,280 square feet in size, another warehouse which is about half that size, a coffee processing plant, a bean packaging plant and a frozen food warehouse. It has 340 trucks which travel more than 2½ million miles a year delivering merchandise to Certified's member stores. Certified also provides its members with assistance in merchandising, advertising, promotions and inventory control.

34. In 1948, Certified's wholesale sales to its members reached a then all-time high of $87 million. By 1954, its annual sales were $198 million and in 1962 they were $345 million. Thus, in the 14 years since 1948, Certified's sales to its members increased by more than 400%. The volume of Certified's purchases exceeds by a large measure the volume of purchases of any chain which does business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, with the exception of large national chains such as A&P, Safeway, and Acme Stores (Alpha Beta).

35. Orange Empire Co-op, a buying cooperative sponsored by A. M. Lewis Co., offers substantially the same products, services and advantages to its members as Certified. Orange Empire has more than 1000 members, a large number of which do business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In 1945, Orange Empire's wholesale sales amounted to less than $13 million. In 1961 its wholesale sales were approximately $280 million. In 1962, its wholesale sales were $321 million.

36. The membership of Certified is made up mainly of small grocery retailers which are the primary source of Certified's business. About the only grocery concerns doing business in Los Angeles or Orange Counties which do not belong to and buy from one cooperative or another are the very small so-called "Mom and Pop" stores and a few, but not all, of the large chains. The single store operator or small grocer, by reason of membership in Certified, Orange Empire, or Spartan, can compete successfully with the large chains in purchasing products carried by such cooperatives.

37. Many of this area's leading chains commenced business here with one store, and the opportunity to buy through a cooperative.

38. Certified, Spartan and Orange Empire do not carry fresh meat or produce or certain dairy items. The single store or small operator can effectively compete in purchasing produce. The evidence fails to support the plaintiff's claim that the large chains have a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies or dairy items.

39. Competition in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles, as in other retail businesses, is a contest for the patronage of consumers. Direct competition usually exists between any two stores only to the extent that they vie for the patronage of the same customers, although the evidence showed that there is a network of competition in the area in the sense that stores respond to competitive practices initiated by a competitor. In some densely populated areas, a store's draw area will often be limited to less than a mile. The average customer is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about four miles, to shop and to pass by other stores in order to go to a specific store which she believes will meet her top demands. In some localities, natural or man-made barriers such as hills, freeways, railroad tracks and the like will limit a store's draw area. The limitation thus imposed on the draw area of any particular store means that it is in substantial competition only with other stores in the same immediate vicinity. A store in Santa Monica does not compete directly with a store 20 miles away in Pasadena. Each of those stores competes directly only with stores nearby and then only to the extent that they can attract the same customers. Chains with stores in many communities compete with concerns, both large and small, which also have stores in those communities. On the other hand, a concern with only one store competes directly only with concerns operating stores nearby.

40. Customers of supermarkets take various things into consideration in choosing a market at which to shop, including the following: Price, general appearance of the store, size, variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free-standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, courteous service and cleanliness of the store.

41. Prior to the merger, the twenty leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and as such each of these chains competed with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As a part of the competition, the major chains as well as other grocers frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains. Competition between individual Von's and Shopping Bag stores was limited to those instances where a store of each company was so located that both could compete for some of the same customers. In such instances, the competition was intensive.

42. Prior to the merger, both Von's and Shopping Bag were substantial competitive factors in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and said area is a substantial and significant economic market.

43. During the last thirty years, the smaller grocery concerns doing business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties—concerns operating one, two or three stores—have proven their ability to compete with each other and with stores operated by larger concerns. As noted in Finding 37, many of today's chains entered the grocery business in Los Angeles with one store and were able to grow. Many others have chosen to stay small but they, too, have operated and continue to operate successful businesses.

44. The following examples of successful smaller concerns doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area illustrate the competitive opportunity available to firms of any size:

(a) Reynold Elkin, after 18 years of experience as an employee of various chains, acquired an older store in Inglewood in 1958. Directly across the street was a newer, larger Safeway store and within a mile of this store is a Von's, a Thriftimart, a Fox and a number of single stores. Mr. Elkin has increased his sales by 400% since 1958.

(b) Harlos Gross purchased an old Shopping Bag store in Temple City in 1953. His sales were $600,000 in the first year of operation, but have exceeded $1,000,000 in every year since then despite the fact that after 1953 twelve new grocery stores, many of them operated by larger chains, opened up within a radius of two miles of his store.

(c) Albert Goldstein was an executive of Boys Markets from 1933 to 1958 and Vice President and General Manager of Food Giant from 1958 to October, 1962, during which time Food Giant grew from a 19 to a 53-store chain. In October, 1962, Mr. Goldstein went into business on his own by purchasing an older Food Giant store directly across the street from a newly opened Von's store located in a large shopping center. Mr. Goldstein can and does operate this store successfully in competition with Food Giant and in the face of the new competition from Von's.

(d) Joseph Goldberg was a former executive of King Cole, Inc., a six-store chain. In March, 1961, that chain disbanded and Mr. Goldberg took over operation of one of its stores in Whittier. This store is within 100 yards of a Safeway and a Food Giant, both of which stores are larger and newer than Mr. Goldberg's. Under King Cole, this market had sales of $2.9 million a year. In the first year of its operation under Mr. Goldberg's ownership, its sales were $3.5 million.

(e) Lester Eaton, a government witness, purchased a small grocery store in La Puente in 1952. At the time, Mr. Eaton was 24 years old and his only experience in the grocery business consisted of working as a clerk for six months in the store he acquired. Mr. Eaton's initial investment in the business was $1,000, his total savings at the time. In the next ten years, Mr. Eaton increased sales in his store from $72,000 to $450,000 a year, despite the fact that various of the larger chains opened new stores nearby. With profits made from the operation of his store, Mr. Eaton has purchased a $30,000 parcel of real property on which he plans to build a new supermarket.

(f) Paul Palmer, another government witness, started in the grocery business in 1946. At that time, his total capital assets amounted to $16,000. Today he is the sole stockholder of Country Cousins, Inc. which successfully operates a four-store chain and which has annual sales of more than $6,000,000 and a net worth of between $1½ and $2 million.

(g) Jerry Fleishman, another witness for the Government, was discharged from his position with Shoppers Markets at the age of 45. In 1956, he acquired a small grocery store in Los Angeles. In the next five years, Mr. Fleishman earned more money from this small store than he had made in all the preceding years of his life.

45. There are no substantial barriers to entry into the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

46. Seven of the 24 concerns operating 10 or more stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1961 opened their second store sometime after 1952. Concerns operating two or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties increased in number from 96 to 150 from 1953 to 1962, with the greatest numerical increase appearing in concerns which operated two or three stores.

47. Records of the State Board of Equalization show that in 1960, 128 grocery stores were opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area by concerns which apparently were new entrants. In the same year, there were 119 openings by concerns operating at least one other store.

48. Eighteen of the 30 government industry witnesses and 10 of the defendant's industry witnesses commenced their present businesses subsequent to the year 1948.

49. Many executives from chain store operations have left the various chains and opened up stores on their own, usually beginning with a single store and ultimately developing into a small chain of supermarkets. One of the great problems for the larger chains is the loss of executives who leave to open grocery businesses of their own. In many instances these persons have purchased a single store of one of the chains, usually where it was not doing too well, and from that point developed a successful grocery retail business. The experience gained while employed by larger chains has apparently been the basis for the success of many of these operations. There is no doubt that experience in the grocery business has usually made it possible for a person to enter the retail grocery field as a single-store operator and be successful. On the other hand, several of the chains encountered difficulty because of lack of experience, over-expansion and lack of capitalization and were forced into bankruptcy or compelled to sell.

50. As a result of its merger with Shopping Bag, Von's in 1960 ranked second behind Safeway in terms of both sales and number of stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The warehousing and distribution facilities of Von's and Shopping Bag were combined and personnel of the two concerns were realigned under a single management. None of the stores of the two concerns was closed. Each store continued to operate under either the name "Von's" or the name "Von's-Shopping Bag."

51. The merger of Shopping Bag into Von's did not materially change the competitive situation in the area. It did not increase or decrease competition store for store with any grocery concern, whether single store or chain, since the acquired stores continued as before.

52. The merger has had no adverse effect on competition in the more than four years since it was consummated. Competition prior to the merger was intense and vigorous and it is no less so today. There is no evidence from which it could be concluded that there is a reasonable probability of any lessening of competition in the foreseeable future.

53. It is difficult to determine with precision exactly what draw area a particular store has. Nevertheless, it appears that Von's and Shopping Bag stores were actually directly competing for some of the same customers in only four or five areas of the entire Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In each of these areas there were, and still are, at least six other stores operated by chains as well as a number of stores operated by smaller concerns competing with Von's and Shopping Bag for the patronage of customers.

Any elimination of competition between Von's and Shopping Bag stores as a result of the merger would not have, and in fact has not had, any discernible effect on competition generally in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

54. Shopping center developers prefer to deal with a large grocery chain with a well-advertised name which will attract attention and also induce other large concerns to lease areas in the shopping center. Also, it is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer a company with the greater financial resources. As a result, the larger chains with greater financial resources are most often sought after as shopping center tenants and smaller concerns therefore have difficulty in obtaining shopping center locations. Not all good grocery store locations are in shopping centers. Prior to the merger Von's was able to and it did obtain shopping center locations.

55. Prior to the merger both Von's and Shopping Bag bought directly from suppliers and operated their own warehouses and their own trucks by means of which merchandise was distributed to their stores. Many chains undertake to buy, warehouse and distribute some or all of their merchandise rather than have these functions performed for them by a cooperative because they deem it desirable to do so in order to assure adequate inventory control and to better control their greater distribution problems which necessarily arise in the operation of a number of stores. Prior to the merger, both Von's and Shopping Bag bought directly from suppliers, operated their own warehouses and their own distribution systems, and since the merger Von's has continued to do so.

56. The acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's has not resulted in an undue reduction in the number of competing enterprises in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

57. There was and for the foreseeable future appears to be no reasonable probability that the acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's will have the effect of unduly reducing the number of competing enterprises in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

58. The Von's-Shopping Bag merger was not likely to, has not, and is not likely adversely to affect competition generally or otherwise in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. However, other events have occurred since the merger which have affected and on the whole caused an increase in competition.

59. In the year 1960, 246 new grocery stores were opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, of which 128 were new "single outlet" stores. 67 of these 246 new stores were opened by the area's twenty leading chains. 179 were opened by smaller concerns.* Of these 246 stores only three were opened by Von's or Shopping Bag.

60. Since the merger American Stores (now Acme Stores, Inc.), the nation's fourth largest retail grocery chain, has entered the Los Angeles market by acquiring Alpha Beta Food Stores; and Food Fair, the nation's sixth largest retail grocery concern, has entered the Los Angeles market by acquiring a number of the stores formerly operated by the bankrupt Fox Markets. Food Fair has also commenced operating grocery concessions in discount houses in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. On September 3, 1963, Kroger Company, the nation's third largest grocery chain, entered this market by acquiring Market Basket, one of the largest local chains.

61. Prior to the merger, the sale of groceries and related products in so-called discount houses was virtually unknown. Since the merger, this new form of grocery merchandising has become increasingly popular in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Today there are approximately 35 discount houses with food departments in that area, and the evidence indicates that this form of grocery merchandising is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantial additional competitive force. Typically, these discount houses are large retail establishments which sell all types of products, including appliances, soft goods and more recently groceries, at prices which are generally lower than can be found in other retail outlets. These lower prices are made possible primarily through savings which are realized in labor and overhead costs. For example, most discount house food departments have less elaborate fixtures than many supermarkets and they remain open for a shorter period of time each day, thereby avoiding overtime labor costs and the like. Retail grocery concerns such as Food Giant, Thriftimart, Lucky Stores, Food Fair, and Mayfair, as well as smaller concerns such as Foods Co. and Supreme Foods, have commenced operating food departments in discount houses since the merger. It has been shown that most discount houses have a draw area of six miles or more. The majority of the Von's-Shopping Bag stores are within six miles of a discount house.

* Statistics with respect to store openings in later years have not been made available.

62. Since the merger, an increasing number of bantam stores, or superettes as they are sometimes called, have been opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

63. Another development since the merger has been the opening of so-called drive-in milk depots. These establishments are small retail outlets which sell milk, other dairy products, bread, wieners, and other convenience items. These milk depots have a natural competitive advantage in that they are permitted under regulations issued pursuant to the California Milk Control Act to sell milk at a lesser price than conventional grocery stores. There were few such milk depots in 1960; today they account for 16% of all the milk sold in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

64. Other types of retail establishments, notably liquor stores and drug stores, are selling an increasing number and amount of products usually found in grocery stores. Some liquor stores now sell more bread than some supermarkets, and the sales of grocery products in some liquor stores exceed the sales of some "Mom and Pop" grocery stores.

65. There is no reliable evidence that as of the date of the merger on March 28, 1960 there was a reasonable probability that the merger would result in a substantial lessening of competition in the purchase, distribution or retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

66. In the more than four years since it took place, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has not resulted in any lessening of competition in the purchase, distribution or retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and there is no reasonable probability that in the foreseeable future it will have such an effect.

67. The retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is now and for many years has been a highly competitive business characterized by a large number of firms competing for the business available at reasonable prices.

68. As of the date of the merger on March 28, 1960, there was not a reasonable probability that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products would be adversely affected by the merger.

69. There is no evidence that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products has been adversely affected by the merger.

70. There is no reasonable probability that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products will be adversely affected by the merger.

71. The effect of the merger is not substantial. Von's faces and will continue to face strong and vigorous competition. There is no reliable evidence that this merger is likely to have an adverse effect on prices or on the quality of service rendered the public.

72. In the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area there is an abundance of strong, competing sellers, a wide choice of competing stores from which the purchasing public may conveniently choose to shop, a lack of obstacles restraining new entrants into the business, and a lack of power in the defendant or others to control prices, supply or entry. All of these factors tend to insure continued vigorous competition.

73. As of the date of the merger, there were more than 4000 separate concerns operating more than 4800 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. After the merger, Von's was operating a total of 64 stores—less than 1.4% of the total number of stores in the two counties.

74. In 1958, i.e., two years prior to the merger, Von's percentage of sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 4.7% and Shopping Bag's was 4.2%, as compared to the 8% of Safeway and 6.4% of Ralphs. After the merger, however, on March 28, 1960, Von's did not become the market leader in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In the year 1960, Safeway Stores operated 146 grocery stores in the area, the sales of which were $184,313,000. This represented approximately 8% of total grocery store sales and 7.4% of total food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In the same year, Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger and Von's after the merger operated a total of 66 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. These stores had sales of $172,488,000 in 1960, which represents 7.5% of total grocery store sales and 6.9% of total food store sales in the two counties.

75. Both Von's and Shopping Bag were local concerns of local origin, both having commenced business in the 1930's with one store and having grown a store at a time thereafter. (See Findings 1 through 9.) Von's is still a local concern. All but 8 of its stores are located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. The remaining 8 are located in adjoining counties (i.e., San Bernardino, San Diego and Ventura.) Also doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are the following, all of which have stores in competition with one or more Von's stores:

(a) The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (A&P), the largest retail grocery concern in the United States, which in 1962 had a total of 4,475 stores located in 38 states and Canada, sales in excess of $5 billion a year and assets in excess of $767 million.

(b) Safeway Stores, Incorporated, the nation's second largest retail grocery concern, which in 1962 had several thousand stores in 29 states and Canada, sales in excess of $2.5 billion annually and assets of more than $473 million.

(c) Alpha Beta-Acme, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Acme Stores, Inc. (formerly American Stores), the fourth largest retail grocery concern in America. Acme Stores, Inc. in 1962 had 845 stores, sales in excess of $1 billion annually and assets of more than $209 million.

(d) Food Fair Stores, Inc., the nation's sixth largest grocery chain which in 1962 had 465 stores in ten states, sales of nearly $1 billion a year and assets of $193 million.

(e) Mayfair Markets, which in 1962 operated 178 supermarkets in California, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, had sales in excess of $288 million annually, and total assets of more than $62 million.

(f) Lucky Stores, Inc., which in 1962 operated 141 supermarkets in California, Arizona and Washington, had sales of more than $232 million annually and total assets in excess of $47 million.

76. The Kroger Co., the nation's third largest chain, which did not previously do business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, has now acquired Market Basket, a local chain with 55 stores located primarily in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Kroger in 1962 had a total of 1,354 grocery stores in 23 states, annual sales of nearly $2 billion, and total assets of more than $400 million.

77. In addition, there are approximately 17 "local" chains operating 10 or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties (seven of which were not operating as many as two stores as late as 1952), 126 other concerns operating two or more stores in those counties and several thousand single-store operators.

78. The acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's did not result in any appreciable increase in the level of concentration measured in terms of the market share of the leading concerns doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, even as reflected by plaintiff's Exhibit 8. According to that exhibit, the share of the business accounted for by the 12 largest firms, for example, increased from 48.0% to 50.0%, or by only 1.2%, and the market share of the top twenty increased from 56.9% to 57.4%, or by only ½ of 1%.

79. The area's leading twenty concerns in 1950 enjoyed sales which amounted to approximately 40% of total grocery store sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The twenty leading chains in 1960 had sales amounting to approximately 54% of the total. The fact that the leading twenty chains in 1960 were in part made up of concerns which either were not in existence or were not in the leading twenty in 1950 makes any comparison between them virtually meaningless other than the fact that it shows the ability of smaller concerns to grow and expand. The fact that the market share of the leading three, four and five concerns has declined in recent years means that any increase in the market share of the leading twenty concerns is attributable to the growth of smaller concerns. At least sever of the concerns in the top twenty by 1960 were not even in existence as chains (i.e., having more than one store) in 1948. They are Food Giant, Fox, Hughes, Yor-Way, McCoy's, Shoppers and Pix.

80. There has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased despite the disappearance of a number of the smaller, older, corner grocery stores for the following reasons:

(a) In 1952 there were ten concerns which each operated ten or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. These concerns expanded their operations in the following decade. The growth and success of these concerns did not deter others from entering the business and expanding. By 1961, 14 smaller concerns had grown to the point where they also were operating ten or more stores in the two counties. Seven of these opened their second store sometime after 1952. In addition, the number of concerns operating more than one but fewer than ten stores increased in number from 86 in 1952 to 126 in 1961. Neither the size nor subsequent growth of the market leaders in 1952 offered any deterrent to the entry and growth of smaller concerns.

(b) In 1948, Safeway was the leading chain operating in Los Angeles. Both its assets and number of stores were many times greater than any of its rivals (with the exception of A&P which had only 21 stores in Los Angeles at the time). However, other companies, the vast majority of which were local concerns, were able to compete effectively against Safeway. Although Safeway's sales increased its percentage share of the market declined.

(c) The share of the market enjoyed by the leading three, four and five concerns declined from 1952 to 1960 while the market share of smaller concerns increased.

(d) By 1958, the leading twenty concerns accounted for only slightly more than half of the total grocery store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. After 1958, their market share declined.

(e) The entry and growth of new and smaller concerns, the declining share of the market of the industry's leaders, the inability of larger concerns to dominate the market to any degree despite their own success and expansion, and the ability of smaller concerns to compete effectively against larger ones indicates there is no likelihood of a tendency to monopoly.

81. There have been some prior mergers between retail grocery concerns in the area but the evidence is that these acquisitions were either market extensions by companies not previously doing business in the area (e.g., Lucky Stores, Kroger, Acme Markets, Inc., Food Fair), or were in part offset by the subsequent failure of the acquiring concern and the disposal of its stores (e.g., Fox, McDaniel's and Yor-Way), or were largely if not entirely offset by sales by the acquiring concern of a large number of the acquired or others of its stores (e.g., Thriftimart, Mayfair). The history of the grocery business in this area is marked by the fact that the larger chains furnish the training, experience and frequently the stores for the future competitors who leave their employ to enter into the grocery business for themselves. There is no evidence that Von's or Shopping Bag had been involved in any prior merger.

82. The market share of Von's after its merger with Shopping Bag is not sufficient to warrant a finding of a reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition or of a tendency to monopoly in the relevant market. This is particularly true in the retail grocery industry in this area for the following reasons:

(a) The competitive effectiveness of any particular store in this market is not necessarily dependent on the market share controlled by the owner of the particular retail store;

(b) Market share in the retail grocery business in this area cannot necessarily be equated with market power, particularly because of the existence of the strong cooperative buying organizations, Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. and Orange Empire, which enable the single-store operators and small chains to purchase their supplies as cheaply as the larger chains;

(c) The market share involved in this case is controlled by an entirely local company;

(d) The relative ease of entry into the business, the greatly expanding population, the inability of the industry leaders to hold their market share, the ability of new entrants and smaller concerns to survive and grow and the constant changes in and the emergence of new forms of marketing of groceries and related products tend to insure continued vigorous and increased competition;

(e) Substantiality in a given case depends on a variety of factors. The factors mentioned above together with the experience of more than four years since the merger occurred, which has demonstrated that this merger has had no adverse effect on and has not lessened competition in this market, require the finding that there is not a reasonble probability that this merger may tend to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market.

83. There has been no tendency to monopoly evident in the purchase, distribution or sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As of March 28, 1960, there was not a reasonable probability that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger would tend, and in the more than four years since the merger it has not tended, to create such a monopoly. There is no reasonable probability that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag may tend to create a monopoly in the foreseeable future.

84. Both Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger and Von's after the merger were engaged in interstate commerce in that they purchased approximately 51% of the groceries and related products ultimately offered for sale in their stores from outside California.

85. Competition in the retail sale of groceries and related products taken as a whole in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is competition in interstate commerce.

86. In addition to the foregoing, the Court finds in all respects as set forth in the following Conclusions of Law:

Conclusions of Law

The Court concludes:

1. In all respects as set forth in the foregoing Findings of Fact.

2. This Court has jurisdiction over this cause by reason of Sections 7 and 15 of the Clayton Act, as amended. (15 U.S.C. §§ 18 and 25.)

3. The relevant line of commerce for purposes of determining whether or not the Von's-Shopping Bag merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, is groceries and related products taken as a whole.

4. The relevant section of the country for determining whether the Von's-Shopping Bag merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California.

5. There is not a reasonable probability that the effect of Von's acquisition of Shopping Bag's stock may be substantially to lessen competition in said line of commerce and in said section of the country.

6. There is not a reasonable probability that Von's acquisition on March 28, 1960 of Shopping Bag's stock may have the effect of tending to create a monopoly in said line of commerce and in said section of the country.

7. Von's acquisition of Shopping Bag's stock does not violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

8. The plaintiff's proof failed to support the allegations of its complaint.

9. Defendants are entitled to judgment that plaintiff take nothing by its action.

Civil Action No. 336-60-CC

[Title omitted]

MOTION UNDER RULE 52(b) FOR AMENDMENT OF FINDINGS AND FOR ADDITIONAL FINDINGS—FILED DECEMBER 28, 1964

Having submitted proposed findings on July 3, 1963, and having objected to various sets of proposed findings submitted by defendants, plaintiff does not repeat previous objections. However, pursuant to Rule 52(b), we respectfully make the following motion:

A. It is requested that finding 74 be amended to read as follows:

> 74. In 1958, i.e., two years prior to the merger, Von's percentage of sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 4.7% and Shopping Bag's was 4.2%, as compared to the 8% of Safeway and 6.4% of Ralphs. After the merger, however, on March 28, 1960, Von's did not become the market leader in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In the year 1960, Safeway Stores operated 146 grocery stores in the area, the sales of which were $184,313,000. In the same year, Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger and Von's after the merger operated a total of 66 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. These stores had sales of $172,488,000 in 1960.

B. It is requested that additional findings be made as set forth below:

Additional Finding Number 1. The following table shows grocery store openings and closings in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area for the calendar year 1960 by single outlet and multiple outlet operators:

Multiple Outlet	Single Outlet
119 Openings	128 Openings
42 Closings	260 Closings
77 Net Gain	132 Net Loss

Additional Finding Number 2. The following table shows the openings of grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1960 in various annual sales groupings:

Frequency Distribution by Annual Sales

	Under $500,000	$500,000 to $1,000,000	$1,000,000 to $1,500,000	$1,500,000 to $2,000,000	Over $2,000,000	Total
Ten Largest	1	17	6	3	18	45
Next Ten	1	9	3	2	7	22
Remaining Multiple Outlets	28	12	5	5	2	52
Total Multiple Outlets	30	38	14	10	27	119
Single Outlets	118	4	2	1	2	127
Total	148	42	16	11	29	246

Additional Finding Number 3. The following table shows the number of grocery stores obtaining grocery permits in 1960 which discontinued them by November 15, 1961:

	Ten Largest Chains	Next Ten Largest Chains	Other Multiple Outlets	All Multiple Outlets	Single Outlets	Total
Obtaining Permits	45	22	52	119	127	246
Discontinuing permits	5	5	18	28	53	81
Retaining their original permits	40	17	34	91	74	165

Additional Finding Number 4. The following table shows the dollar sales (in thousands) and percentage distribution of annual sales of grocery stores opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1960:

Ten Largest Chains	Next Ten	Remaining Multiple Outlets	Total Multiple Outlets	Single Outlets	Total
$73,681	$33,519	$32,290	$139,490	$18,321	$157,811
46.6%	21.2%	20.4%	88.3% *	11.6%	100.0% *

* Does not equal the sum of its components because of rounding.

Additional Finding Number 5. The following acquisitions and mergers are recorded in the workpapers* of Godfrey Lebhar, a principal defense witness, for the period 1953 through 1961:

Year	Acquired Firm	Acquiring Firm	No. of Stores Acquired
1957	Bi-Right & Big Bear	Piper Mart	3
1958	Bob's Supermarket	Mayfair	7
1961	Border's Markets	Better Foods	3
1954	Carty Brothers	Kory's Markets	8
1958	Clark Markets	Food Giant	10
1956	Desert Fair	Fox	4
1959	Hiram's	Lucky	6
1958	Iowa Pork Shops	Fox	11
1957	Jim Dandy Mkts.	Lucky	9
1961	McDaniel's Markets	Food Giant (and others)	16
1957	Panorama Markets	Food Giant	3
1958	Patton's Mkts.	Pix	4
1958	Raisin Markets	Alpha Beta	13
1960	Rankins Markets	Piggly Wiggly	4
1959	S & K Markets	Pix	2
1960	Shopping Bag	Von's	37
1959	Shop Right Markets	Pix	3
1958	C. S. Smith	Yor-Way	5
1957	Toluca Marts	Food Giant	2
1957	U-Tell-Em Markets	Mayfair	10
	Total		160

Additional Finding Number 6. In the period 1948 through 1958, 9 of the 20 leading chains acquired 126 grocery stores from concerns outside the top 20 chains and in 1958 ninety-nine of the acquired stores were still operated by the acquired chains and had sales of $192.9 million. Without the sales of the acquired stores, the market share of these same 20 top chains in 1958 would drop from 56.9% to 47.3%.

Additional Finding Number 7. Concentration in the 4, 8, 12, 16 and 20 largest grocery chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, both before and after the Von-Shopping Bag merger, based on 1958 sales, was as follows:

	Before Merger	After Merger
20 largest chains	56.9%	57.4%
16 largest chains	53.4	54.2
12 largest chains	48.8	50.0
8 largest chains	40.9	44.0
4 largest chains	24.4	28.8

* The workpapers are in evidence as Gx. 78.

Additional Finding Number 8. The following table shows changes in the combined market share enjoyed by the 4, 8, 12, 16 and 20 largest chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area between the years 1948 and 1958:

	1948	1958
4 largest chains	25.9%	24.4%
8 largest chains	33.7	40.9
12 largest chains	38.8	48.8
16 largest chains	41.6	53.4
20 largest chains	43.8	56.9

Additional Finding Number 9. Answers submitted by the defendants to the Government's interrogatories admitted that in 1960 20% of the stores operated by Von and Shopping Bag were so located that they competed with each other for some of the same customers at the time of the merger. The stores which the defendants' answers to interrogatories show to be serving the same customers are listed below:

(a) Von's store No. 27 at 15704 Whitwood Lane, Whittier, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 1 at 1611 West Whittier Lane, La Habra; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(b) Von's store No. 27 competed with Shopping Bag store No. 21 at 1183 Quad Way, Whittier; the stores were 2½ miles apart.

(c) Von's store No. 29 located at 1000 East Valley, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 27 at 127 North Garfield, Monterey Park; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(d) Von's store No. 4 at 2280 Atlantic Avenue, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 27; the stores were 3 miles apart.

(e) Von's store No. 31 at 973 South Glendora, West Covina, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 28 at 15427 Amar Road, La Puente; the stores were 1 mile apart.

(f) Von's store No. 31 at 973 South Glen, West Covina, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 32 at 1170 West Garvey Boulevard, West Covina; the stores were 1½ miles apart.

(g) Von's store No. 26 at 12156 Brookhurst Avenue, Garden Grove, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 33 at 9922 Catella, Anaheim; the stores were 1 mile apart.

(h) Von's store No. 5 at 10001 Paramount Boulevard, Downey, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 35 at 9050 East Firestone Boulevard, Downey; the stores were 2 miles apart.

In addition a study prepared by one of the defendants' expert witnesses and introduced into evidence by the defendants showed that the following Von and Shopping Bag stores were within a two mile draw area of the same customers at the time of the merger.

(a) Von's store No. 4 at 2280 Atlantic Boulevard, Monterey Park, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 40 at 1201 West Whittier, Montibello.

(b) Von's store No. 29 at 1000 East Valley Boulevard, Alhambra, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 16 at 2200 West Valley Boulevard, Alhambra, as well as Shopping Bag store No. 11 at 2270 Huntington Drive, San Marino.

(c) Von's store No. 27 at 15740 Whitwood Lane, Whittier, competed with Shopping Bag store No. 22 at 9140 East Whittier, Pico.

In 1960 total sales by the Von's stores set forth in this finding were $21,157,491 and the total sales by the Shopping Bag stores were $22,112,512.

Additional Finding Number 10. In 1960 Von was operating or in the process of opening the following stores among others:

On the basis of the average 10 minute driving time or 4 mile average driving distance each of the Von stores listed above was so located that it could compete for some of the same customers with one or more of the Shopping Bag stores listed above. Each of the Shopping Bag stores was so located that it could compete for some of the same customers with one or more Von stores. As of 1960 census data 1,058,000 persons lived in areas that were accessible to both Von's and Shopping Bag's stores, as listed above. These persons accounted for annual grocery expenditures of approximately four hundred eighty-one and a half million dollars.

In 1960 total sales by the Von's stores set forth in this finding were $35,126,288 and total sales by the Shopping Bag stores were $40,639,913.

NOTICE OF APPEAL TO THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES—Filed February 12, 1965

I. Notice is hereby given that the United States of America, the plaintiff above named, hereby appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States from the final judgment entered in this action on December 17, 1964 dismissing this action. This appeal is taken pursuant to Section 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U.S.C. 29.

II. The Clerk will please prepare a transcript of the record in this cause for transmission to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, and include therein the entire record before the district court, including all papers filed with the Clerk of the court in this proceeding, the transcript of the pre-trial, post-trial and trial proceedings, the affidavits, statements of witnesses, depositions and all other exhibits introduced at trial, the proposed findings submitted by the parties, and this Notice of Appeal.

III. The question presented by this appeal is whether the effect of the merger of Von's Grocery Company and Shopping Bag Food Stores may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

Respectfully submitted, /s/ Robert B. Hummel. /s/ James J. Coyle. /s/ John F. Hughes. /s/ Malcolm F. Knight, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the district court (App. A, infra, pp. 1a–19a) is reported at 233 F. Supp. 976. The findings of fact and conclusions of law are set forth in Appendix B, infra, pp. 20a–52a.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the district court dismissing the complaint was entered on December 17, 1964 (App. C, infra, p. 53a). The notice of appeal was filed on February 12, 1965. The time to docket the appeal was extended by the district court to June 12, and by this court to June 28, 1965. The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15

U.S.C. 29. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Company, et al., 378 U.S. 158.

QUESTION PRESENTED

Von's Grocery Company, the third largest seller of grocery products in the Los Angeles area, acquired Shopping Bag Food Stores, the sixth ranking chain of grocery supermarkets in the area. The question presented is whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, in view of the fact that the merging companies were substantial and leading competitive factors in the retail grocery business in the area—a business which has shown significant and increasing tendencies toward concentration in the hands of a few large chains.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. 18, provides in pertinent part:

> No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

STATEMENT

This is a direct appeal from a final judgment of the district court dismissing after trial the government's complaint alleging that the merger of Von's Grocery Company ("Von's") and Shopping Bag Food Stores ("Shopping Bag"), would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

The complaint, filed on March 25, 1960, alleged that the merger would destroy the actual and potential competition between the merging companies in the distribution and sale of groceries and related products, would eliminate the significant role of Shopping Bag as an independent competitive stimulant in the market, would foster further mergers and acquisitions by other grocery supermarket chains, and would increase the concentration of ownership, management, and control of grocery supermarkets operated in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in the hands of a few large corporations. The merger was consummated on March 28, 1960, after the district court denied an application for a temporary restraining order.[1]

1. THE RELEVANT PRODUCT AND GEOGRAPHIC MARKETS

The pertinent facts are substantially undisputed; most were stipulated (App. A, pp. 3a–6a). It was agreed by the parties, and found by the district court, that the defendants were engaged in interstate commerce (App. A, p. 5a; App. B, Fdg. 84); that the relevant line of commerce was groceries and related products as a whole (App. A, p. 5a; App. B, Fdg.

[1] On June 30, 1960, the court refused a preliminary injunction which would have required separation of the two companies' operations pending the outcome of the suit, and stated that "the stores themselves are the basic assets of the business and the stores may be divested individually or in a group."

14);[2] and that the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, was the area of effective competition and the relevant section of the country for determining the effects of the merger (App. A, p. 5a–6a; App. B, Fdg. 15). The Los Angeles area is the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income, and retail dollar sales. At the time of the merger, approximately 6,750,000 persons resided in the area and total retail sales of groceries were about $2,500,000,000 annually (App. B, Fdg. 15).

2. THE MERGING COMPANIES

Von's and Shopping Bag were among the leading chains of grocery supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. Both had commenced operations in the early 1930's, had grown significantly, and were large, profitable and expanding firms (App. B, Fdgs. 1–3, 6–9, 12(b)). Both companies retailed a complete line of groceries and related products at self-service, cash-and-carry supermarkets; both bought directly from suppliers; and both operated their own warehouse and distribution centers (App. B, Fdgs. 3, 5, 9, 55).

In 1958, Von's operated 27 grocery supermarkets in the area, with a sales volume of approximately $94,000,000. With 4.7 percent of total retail grocery store sales, it ranked third in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Between 1948 and 1958, Von's had doubled the number of its stores, practically doubled its share of the market, and quadrupled its sales (App. B, Fdgs. 3, 12(b), 25).

[2] These are the products "usually and customarily offered for sale in supermarkets and grocery stores, and consist of groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs and sundries * * *" (App. B, Fdg. 14).

In 1958, Shopping Bag operated 36 supermarkets with approximately $90,531,000 in sales. Thirty-four of the stores, with sales of approximately $84,164,000, were located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. This gave Shopping Bag approximately 4.2 percent of the total retail grocery store sales and a rank of sixth in the area. Between 1948 and 1958, with an increase from 15 to 34 stores in the area, Shopping Bag more than tripled its share of the market and enjoyed more than a sevenfold increase in sales (App. B, Fdgs. 9, 12(b), 25).

Combined, the merging companies would have ranked first in terms of total sales in 1958 with approximately 8.9 percent of the market (App. A, p. 8a; App. B, Fdg. 74).[8] Von's ranked second to Safeway after the merger in 1960.

[8] A table incorporated in the court's opinion (App. A, p. 8a) lists the market share and industry rank of the ten leading chains for 1958 as follows:

	Rank in sales		Sales in Los Angeles Metropolitan Area	Percentage
	Before merger	After merger
Total of Von and Shopping Bag		1	$177,667,000	8.9
Safeway	1	2	161,233,000	8.0
Ralph's	2	3	126,282,000	6.4
Von's	3		93,703,000	4.7
Market Basket	4	4	88,805,000	4.4
Thriftimart	5	5	88,383,000	4.4
Shopping Bag	6		84,164,000	4.2
Food Giant	7	6	72,727,000	3.6
Alpha Beta Rabins	8	7	63,727,000	3.1
Fox Markets	9	8	56,436,000	2.8
Mayhar	10	9	39,300,000	2.0
Total				63.6

3. THE ROLES OF THE MERGING COMPANIES IN COMPETITION IN THE MARKET

The district court found that the twenty leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area were all part of a network of retail grocery store competition in which the major grocery chains, as well as other grocers, "frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains" (App. B, Fdgs. 39, 41). Von's and Shopping Bag were both found to be "substantial competitive factors" in this market (App. B, Fdg. 42). They were among the relatively few firms which were able to engage in area-wide advertising, particularly in the metropolitan newspapers with broad circulation (Gx. 17, Gx. 18, Gx. 19).[4] Prior to the merger the major chains, including Von's and Shopping Bag, carefully checked and responded to each other's pricing policies (Gx. 23). Indeed, these two firms were among the seven which were included in a widely circulated pricing survey utilized by chain and independent grocery retailers in setting prices for their grocery items (Gx. 21).

As to direct competition between individual Von's and Shopping Bag stores the court found that, where the stores were so "located that both could compete for some of the same customers," "the competition was intensive" (App. B, Fdg. 41). The court noted that the average customer was willing to drive at least 10 minutes, or about 4 miles, to reach a particular store (App. B, Fdg. 39), but refused the government's request that it make specific findings as to which of the individual stores were in direct competition for the same customers prior to the merger (Motion under Rule 52(b), pp. 4–8). Although the court suggested that such competition was rather limited,[5] the undisputed evidence shows the substantiality of this "intensive" competition.

Documents introduced by the defendants acknowledged that more than 20 percent of the stores operated by both firms prior to the merger were so located that they were likely to draw customers from overlapping areas (Dx. AV, exhibit E; Dx. BF, pp. 31–34, 77). The sales of these 17 stores in 1960 exceeded $43,000,000—$21,000,000 for Von's stores and $22,000,000 for Shopping Bag stores (Gx. 13).[6] The Government's evidence showed that the direct competition between individual stores was even greater. The testimony indicated that on the basis of ten-minute driving time, almost half of the stores of the two concerns, with sales of approximately $76,000,000, were in a position

[5] It found that there was such direct confrontation in "only four or five areas" (App. B, Fdg. 53), but did not state the number of stores of the merging chains located in those areas.

[6] While only part of the total sales of these 17 stores was made to customers who had readily available to them the competing products of both a Von's and a Shopping Bag store, the fact that each of these stores had to compete with the rival chain for a number of customers and a significant amount of business assured the benefits of competition to all the customers of each store. Thus, the district court found that "the competition was intensive" where stores were so "located that both could compete for some of the same customers" (App. B, Fdg. 41).

to compete directly for the business of over one million customers (Gx. 85, Tr. June 14, 1963, pp. 385–388). In 1960 total sales of the Von's stores so located were $35,126,288 and total sales by Shopping Bag stores so located were $40,639,913 (Gx. 13).

Further undisputed evidence showed that there was a pronounced tendency on the part of both firms to open stores in the same newly developed shopping areas (Gx. 79, 80, 81, 82).

4. THE COMMERCIAL SETTING OF THE MERGER

The changing market structure of grocery retailing in the Los Angeles area is well documented. There has been a continuous decline in the number of small, single-store operators and an increasing trend to large scale supermarkets operated by local and national chains. The court found that between 1950 and 1963, the number of single store operators decreased 1,775, from 5,365 to 3,590 and the number of stores operated by chains of 2 or more stores increased 102, from 856 to 958 (App. B, Fdg. 23).

The decline in the total number of stores was accompanied by a marked increase in the percentage of total retail grocery sales controlled by large chains. In 1948 the 20 leading chains did 43.8 percent of the business; in 1958 they accounted for 56.9 percent (App. A, p. 9a). Department of Commerce statistics also show that the market shares accounted for by the 8 largest chains in the area increased from 33.7 percent in 1948 to 40.9 percent in 1958; for the 12 largest chains, from 38.8 percent in 1948 to 48.8 percent in 1958; and for the 16 largest chains, from 41.6 percent in 1948 to 53.4 percent in 1958 (Gx. 6, 7).

The trend will apparently continue. The leading chains account for a predominant share of the business flowing from new openings. The 20 leading chains enjoyed 67.8 percent of the total dollar sales of grocery stores opened in the area in 1960 (Gx. 43). They opened 25 of the 29 new stores that had sales over $2 million each in that year (Gx. 37).

The period since 1948 has also been characterized by a pattern of purchases of established stores and sales of unwanted locations by the major chains operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. A table prepared from figures obtained by the Federal Trade Commission as a part of its study of food marketing shows that in the period 1948 through 1958, nine of the twenty leading chains acquired 126 grocery stores from concerns outside the top 20 chains. In 1958, 99 of the acquired stores were still operated by the acquiring chains and had sales of $192.9 million. During the same years these chains were disposing of a substantial number of unwanted outlets. While the record does not show the sales volumes of the stores disposed of by the leading chains, it does show that, without the acquired stores. the market share of the 20 top chains in 1958 would have dropped from 56.9 percent to 47.3 percent (Gx. 90, para. 11).[7] [7] Data prepared by a principal defense witness showed that five of the leading ten chains in 1958 made acquisitions of stores in the area between 1957 and 1961 (Gx. 78).

Recently American Stores, Kroger, and Food Fair, three national chains not previously operating in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, have acquired some or all the stores operated by Alpha Beta, Market Basket, and Fox, large local chains. Alpha Beta and Fox had themselves grown by acquisition. (App. B, Fdgs. 60, 75(c), 76, Gx. 78).

5. THE DECISION OF THE DISTRICT COURT

Noting that, because of the stipulations, it was called upon to decide only whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition in grocery products in the Los Angeles area, the district court concluded that this was not its likely effect. The decision was based both on the opinion testimony of some of the industry witnesses and on the absence of any direct evidence that the merger had caused a substantial change in competitive conditions in the grocery market in Los Angeles.

The district court emphasized the large number of competitors in the market, the present vigor of competition, and the continuing possibility of successful entry and growth in the market, despite the competition of the large chains. "It thus appears", the court said, "that the government in this case is really relying upon a mere union between '2 substantial competitive factors.' This, in practical effect, goes back to the Section 7 test which was in effect prior to the amendment of the act in 1950, and was eliminated as was clearly pointed out in the Senate Report. The government argues that over-all competition has been substantially reduced by the merger, but the proof falls short of establishing such to be the case. In fact, the figures relied upon by the government tend to establish to the contrary. Again it is repeated that in 1960 the approximately 4,800 stores in the area were operated by 4,000 separate concerns. The merger here did not materially change that situation." (App. A, pp. 15a–16a).

THE QUESTION IS SUBSTANTIAL

The Report of the House Judiciary Committee on the 1950 Clayton Act amendments made clear that a tide of concentration in traditionally competitive, "small business" industries, including specifically the food industry, was a matter of primary concern to Congress (H. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3):

> * * * [T]he current movement [the merger trend] has had the result of raising the level of economic concentration in a number of very specific ways. In the first place, recent merger activity has been of outstanding importance in several of the traditionally "small business" industries. More acquisitions and mergers have taken place in textiles and apparel and food and kindred products—predominantly "small business" fields—than in any other industries.

This case presents a substantial and important question as to the appropriate standards for application of Section 7 of the Clayton Act to "small business" industries—in particular, to a retail business which historically was marked by a large number of sellers and relatively low concentration, but which now shows a marked trend toward acquisitions, fewer firms, and increasing concentration. The decision in this case will largely determine the structure of the market for retail groceries in the important Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Even more important, it will provide a significant guideline for similar retail sectors of the economy throughout the nation.

The instant merger took place in a market in which a decreasing number of firms have been obtaining a rapidly increasing share of the total business and in which the trend of openings suggests acceleration of the same tendency. It united two leading firms whose pricing policies are followed not only by the other major chains but by the entire retail grocery industry; the merger eliminated all competition between these firms whose combined annual sales totalled $177.9 million or 8.9 percent of the market. We submit that in this kind of a market, a merger of two such firms contravenes the policy of Section 7—repeatedly emphasized in the legislative history of the Act and the decisions of this Court—to halt the rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy and to preserve an economic way of life permitting the successful coexistence of numerous independent units. Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315, 333.

1. The merging chains in this case were major competitive factors in the Los Angeles market. In terms of sales, industry position, market shares, number of supermarkets operated, and expansion activities, they ranked among the largest and most significant entities in the retail grocery business there. The record amply supports the lower court's finding that they were "substantial competitive factors" in the network of retail grocery store competition in the area.

As the third and sixth largest chains, Von's and Shopping Bag occupied imposing positions of market leadership. They were each among the few large chains whose pricing policies were surveyed by the other major chains in establishing their own prices.[8] They were among the seven firms included in a widely circulated pricing survey utilized by both chains and independent retailers in setting prices for their grocery items. Only a few competitors could afford to compete with the merging companies in the kind of area-wide advertising which they used and which had a substantial impact on pricing.

The direct competition between Von's and Shopping Bag was obviously not limited to the neighborhoods in which each had stores. The record shows conclusively that each followed the area-wide pricing policies of the other, as each had to if it was to compete in the neighborhoods where both had stores. See n. 6, p. 7, supra. But even the amount of neighborhood-competition—which the district court described as "intensive"—was substantial. The store-to-store competition extended to stores whose total annual sales amounted to $43,000,000 annually, or to $76,000,000 annually, depending upon whether one accepts the government's analysis or the defendants'. In either event, this direct competition was of substantial proportions. Cf. Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293. Moreover, both companies had aggressively expanded in size and number of stores, were able to compete for new store locations, and were moving into the same newly developed suburban areas. (App. B. Fdgs. 3, 9; Gx. 79, 80, 81, 82).

[8] The former president of Shopping Bag, currently a vice president of Von's, testified that he considered "Safeway and Von's, Food Giant and Ralph's," all large chains, when he set Shopping Bag's prices (Gx. 25). He also testified that Shopping Bag met the prices of Von's and the other larger chains, but was not generally concerned with "Mom and Pop" store prices (Gx. 23).

The elimination of competition between the two firms was in and of itself sufficient to condemn the merger. In terms of size, condition, position in the market and past performance, these two strong chains were substantial competitive factors in a market where not many could be said to fit that description, despite the number of enterprises in the business. The Court has recently reaffirmed the proposition that a merger of "major competitive factors" violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, "without reference to the strength or weakness of whatever competition remained." United States v. First National Bank, 376 U.S. 665, 670, 673. There can be little doubt that a merger which would violate Section 1 is also contrary to Section 7, the purpose of which was to prohibit mergers whose effects upon competition are less immediate than those proscribed by the Sherman Act. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 318, n. 33.

It is hardly necessary to add that the court below was mistaken in believing that the 1950 amendments to Section 7 removed "a mere union between '2 substantial competitive factors' " from the reach of the statute by eliminating specific reference to competition between the merging companies (App. A, pp. 15a–16a). It is entirely clear that, when Congress amended Section 7, it had no intention to declare such an immediate loss of competition to be of no relevance, or even to be of reduced importance; it was merely adding other types of anticompetitive effects to those which the statute had long prohibited. As this Court said in Brown Shoe, supra, at 317, "by the deletion of the 'acquiring-acquired' language in the original text, it [Congress] hoped to make plain that Section 7 applied not only to mergers between actual competitors, but also to vertical and conglomerate mergers whose effect may tend to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country."

2. The anticompetitive effects of the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag are significantly increased by the rapidly concentrating market structure in which the merger took place. The court found that between 1948 and 1958 the share of the market enjoyed by the 20 leading firms increased from 43.8 percent to 56.9 percent, or by almost thirty percent. The increase of the shares of the top eight, twelve, and sixteen firms is equally imposing (see, supra, p. 8), especially in view of the offsetting loss of Safeway's predominant market position during the same years. The evidence as to new openings indicates that the tendency to increasing concentration will continue even without the accelerating force of significant mergers. The twenty leading chains enjoyed 67.8 percent of the sales made by stores opened in 1960.

Section 7 of the Clayton Act was intended to prevent mergers between significant competitors which accelerate the already rapid processes of concentration in a market such as this. In the second largest retail market in the United States, two of the six largest supermarket chains have combined to form a single entity with annual sales of $177.9 million. By almost doubling the size of a concern which was already the third largest in the area, the present merger increased the share of the market enjoyed by the three largest chains from 19.1 percent (in 215 stores) to 23.3 percent (in 249 stores), an increase of 21 percent. The district court's failure to bar that merger, unless reversed by this Court, stands as an open invitation to countermoves in the market.

The merged firm's eight-percent share of the market in this case is substantially greater than the five-percent of the similarly fragmented retail shoe business which, in Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, was viewed as constituting a "substantial" share of the trade in a city, a share which "may have important effects on competition" (370 U.S. at 343). In Brown Shoe, this Court noted that: "If a merger achieving a 5% control were now approved, we might be required to approve future merger efforts by Brown's competitors seeking similar market shares." 370 U.S. at 343–344. The same threat is present here where the leading chains have increased their share of the market by purchases of desirable competing stores and the sale of unwanted outlets and where major national chains have recently entered the market through wholesale acquisitions of large local chains. See supra, pp. 8–9 and n. 7.

The threat of ever-increasing concentration in the Los Angeles market structure is by no means rebutted by the district court's findings that this is an industry traditionally marked by ease of entry and in which a number of sturdy competitors have grown from small beginnings. The 20 leading chains are enjoying more than two-thirds of the business of new stores for good reasons. Entry and expansion by small operators are limited by the natural preference of shopping center operators for established large chains. As the district court found, shopping centers, which are increasingly important as the sites for business growth, prefer "a large grocery chain with a well-advertised name" and a secure financial position; "smaller concerns therefore have difficulty in obtaining shopping center locations" (App. B, Fdg. 54). Small firms cannot compete in effective advertising with the large chains which alone have sufficient resources and a large enough market to warrant the expense of popular media of area-wide circulation. See, supra, p. 6, n. 4. Even the amount of capital required simply to open a supermarket of the optimum size and style for grocery retailing in the current market is much greater than that required for the old-style grocery which was within the reach of so many potential entrants.

3. Much of the importance of this case stems from the fact that what has occurred in the very large Los Angeles market is typical of what has occurred throughout the United States. In January 1960 the Federal Trade Commission published a staff report entitled "Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing" (hereafter, "Economic Inquiry"), which revealed that between 1948 and 1958 food chains with 11 or more stores increased their share of total national grocery sales from 34.5 percent to 43 percent, an increase of almost 25 percent. Economic Inquiry, p. 5. In the decade ending in 1958 these chains acquired about 2,238 stores of which they retained 1,550 in 1958, accounting for 9 percent of total sales of such chains in 1958 (id. at 16). In 1956, when these chains had less than 41 percent of total grocery store sales, they opened almost 70 percent of the large new supermarkets (id. at 15). By 1960 the cost of a new supermarket had approached $500,000 (id. at 11).

Partly in recognition of this trend—which has been a source of continuing concern to Congress[9]—the President recommended and Congress passed Senate Joint Resolution 71, 88th Congress (78 Stat. 269), which created a National Commission on Food Marketing charged with evaluating "[the] effectiveness of the * * * regulatory activities of the Federal Government in terms of present and probable developments in the industry." The effectiveness of the anti-merger provisions of the Clayton Act as an instrument of federal policy in the area of retail marketing of groceries depends upon the standards governing a merger such as this one, and it is, therefore, important for this Court to establish them.

APPENDIX A

United States District Court, Southern District of California, Central Division

No. 336-60-CC Civil

v.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, DEFENDANTS

Memorandum Opinion

Filed: September 14, 1964

This is an action instituted by the United States to enjoin the acquisition of Shopping Bag Food Stores by Von's Grocery Company which, it is alleged, violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18). Prior to March 28, 1960, the defendants operated as separate corporations; they are now merged. Jurisdiction exists in this court under Section 15 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 25). Plaintiff contends and defendants deny that the effect of the merger between the defendants in this proceeding may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.[1]

[1] Clayton Act, § 7, 15 U.S.C.A. 18 (1963), 38 Stat. 730 (1914): "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission (shall acquire the whole or any

The complaint was filed on March 25, 1960, and on March 28, 1960, an application for a temporary restraining order was denied by another judge of this court. Thereafter an application was made by plaintiff for a preliminary injunction to require Von's and Shopping Bag to be operated as separate entities pending trial of the action. This application was also denied by another judge of this court on June 13, 1960, and on July 1, 1960, interlocutory findings of fact and conclusions of law and the interlocutory order denying the motion for preliminary injunction were filed.

On April 24, 1961, a pretrial conference order, signed by the parties, was approved by the court. On December 15, 1961, plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment which was also denied by another judge of this Court.

Beginning in November, 1962, and while discovery proceedings were in progress, efforts were made by the court and counsel to arrive at a method for the presentation of the evidence which would expedite the trial which had been estimated to consume from two to three months. A plan was finally formulated and stipulated to by the parties whereby either side might present, in lieu of oral testimony, affidavits of persons who had been expected to testify. Thereafter the opposing party, if it were desired, could cross-examine such witness by taking a deposition. This procedure was followed with respect to practically all of the witnesses which the parties had anticipated calling at the trial. Both parties called a relatively few witnesses to present oral testimony part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. * * *" at the trial. As a result of the pretrial procedures, the case consumed only approximately five days in actual trial time. Also a great many of the facts in the case were either stipulated to or admitted.

In accordance with the pretrial order, as amended, the following facts were admitted and required no proof:

It was agreed that the trial should be confined to the issue of whether the merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the matter of relief; in the event it was determined that Section 7 had been violated, hearings would thereafter be held as to appropriate relief; Von's was a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business at Los Angeles, California; subsequent to the merger it moved its offices to the former Shopping Bag headquarters at El Monte, California; Von's was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area; it and its predecessors had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sale of a complete line of groceries and related products since 1932; in 1959, Von's operated 28 supermarkets in the Los Angeles area with a total annual sales of approximately $85,000,000 for an average of approximately $3,000,000 in sales per store; also its supermarkets are of the self-service, cash and carry type;

Von's also owned and operated a modern distribution center; direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute the groceries to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area; after the merger Von's sold its distribution center to a competitor and has since used the former Shopping Bag distribution center;

Shopping Bag was a California corporation with principal offices at El Monte, California; on the date of the merger, Shopping Bag was merged into Von's; prior to the merger, Shopping Bag was a leading chain of supermarkets; it and its predecessors had been engaged in the purchase, distribution, and retail sales of a complete line of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area since 1933; in 1959, Shopping Bag operated 36 complete supermarkets in the area, which had a total annual sales of approximately $79,000,000 for an average of approximately $2,100,000 in sales per store; all of its stores were of the self-service, cash and carry type;

In 1958, Von's ranked third and Shopping Bag fifth in terms of total sales by grocery stores in the Los Angeles metropolitan area; Von's had approximately 4.10% and Shopping Bag approximately 3.09% of all grocery store sales in the area; Shopping Bag ranked sixth and Von's eighth in terms of total number of markets operated in the area in that year; combined, Von's and Shopping Bag ranked second in terms of dollar of sales and in terms of total number of supermarkets in the metropolitan area; following the merger, Von's accounted for approximately 8% of all grocery sales in the area; taken as a whole, the following products were agreed to constitute the relevant line of commerce in the case: groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy produce, delicatessen produce, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs, and sundries; in 1959, the sale of food products accounted for 90% of all sales by grocery stores in the area;

The relevant trade area in which defendants operated prior to the merger was the Los Angeles metropolitan area consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties; Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income, and retail dollar sales; approximately 6,750,000 persons reside in the area and total retail sales were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957; the Los Angeles metropolitan area is an appreciable trade area and a section of the country within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act; sales of groceries in the area approximate $2,500,000,000 annually;

Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger were engaged in interstate commerce and Von's presently is engaged in interstate commerce; several cooperatives operate in the metropolitan area, some who sell to nonmembers; Orange Empire, a cooperative, services numerous retail members and nonmembers in California, Arizona, and Nevada with an annual wholesale sales of approximately $280,000,000; prior to the merger, the twenty leading chains of supermarkets were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the area and each of the chains competed with each other; there was direct competition between some of the Von's stores and some of the Shopping Bag stores, particularly in those instances where the stores were so located that they were competing for the same customers.

With respect to the issues of fact and law, the parties are in agreement as follows: (1) that the defendant corporations were engaged in interstate commerce; (2) that the court has jurisdiction; (3) that any products or groups of products which are of sufficiently peculiar characteristics and uses as to make them distinct from all other products are in line of commerce within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act and that groceries and related products, taken as a whole, have such peculiar characteristics and uses in the operation of retail grocery stores;

(4) that groceries and related products are the relevant line of commerce for determining whether the instant merger violates Section 7; (5) that the area of effective competition is a section of the country in the instant case; (6) that the relevant section of the country need not be the entire nation; (7) that the Los Angeles metropolitan area is a relevant section of the country for determining the effect of the merger.

In view of the stipulations and pretrial orders, it thus appears that the court is called upon to decide only the issue as to whether the merger may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the line of commerce and section of the country here involved.

The government apparently in one of its latest memoranda insists, at least inferentially, that the impact upon suppliers is involved as one of the issues in the case. However, it is to be noted that in the pretrial order, as amended, it is stated that defendants assert that the Los Angeles area is not the relevant section of the country as to the wholesale sale and purchase of groceries. There also appears the following:

> "The government assumes no burden of proof as to the relevant section of the country at the wholesale level since it intends to base its case on the probable effects of the merger in the relevant section of the country for grocery retailers which is the Los Angeles metropolitan area." [Emphasis supplied.]

Obviously the pretrial order confined the parties to the matters agreed to therein. Furthermore, the government made no attempt to predicate its case upon the basis that suppliers had been eliminated.

Both the legislative history[2] and decisions of the Supreme Court, beginning with Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, set forth the purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The act was intended to prevent a merger or acquisition of assets when the effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. It was noted in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, at page 332, United States Reports: "But the very wording of § 7 requires a prognosis of the probable future effect of the merger" (italics original). It would appear that in order to determine the future effect resort must be had to the developments in the retail grocery business in the area in question. In making this determination it must be kept in mind that the act intended to cover more than the Sherman Act, yet to stop short of the stated test of Section 7 as it existed at the time the matter was before the Congress for amendment.

The legislative history[2] indicates that the purpose of the proposed amendment to Section 7 was to prohibit the acquisition of the assets of another corporation when the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The over-all purpose was to limit further growth of monopoly and aid in preserving small business. On the one hand, it was desired that the test be more inclusive and stricter than that of the Sherman Act; on the other hand, it was not desired that the legislation go to the extreme of prohibiting all acquisition between competing companies. The intent was to cope with monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and before they had attained such effects as to justify a Sherman Act proceeding. It should be noted that the Senate Report states:

[2] Senate Report No. 1775, 2 U.S. Code Congressional Service, pp. 4293–4300 (81st Congress, 2nd Session, 1950).

> "These various additions and deletions—some strengthening and others weakening the bill—are not conflicting in purpose and effect. They merely are different steps toward the same objective, namely, that of framing a bill which, though dropping portions of the so-called Clayton Act test that have no economic significance, reaches far beyond the Sherman Act." (p. 4297)

The words, "may be," appear in the bill in defining the effect on competition. The committee's report states:

> "The use of these words means that the bill, if enacted, would not apply to the mere possibility but only to the reasonable probability of the prescribed effect, * * *" (p. 4298)

Before the merger, Von's percentage of sales was 4.7%, while Shopping Bag's was 4.2%. Combined, they represent 8.9% of the sales of the metropolitan area. The following table shows the industry rank and share of the total grocery sales of the 10 leading chains in the area in 1958:

	1958 Rank in Sales		Sales in Los Angeles Metropolitan Area	Percentage
	Before Merger	After Merger
Total of Von and Shopping Bag	----------	1	$177,867,000	8.9
Safeway	1	2	161,233,000	8.0
Ralph's	2	3	128,283,000	6.4
Von	3	----------	93,708,000	4.7
Market Basket	4	4	88,806,000	4.4
Thriftimart	5	5	88,883,000	4.4
Shopping Bag	6	----------	84,164,000	4.2
Food Giant	----------	6	72,727,000	3.6
Alpha Beta Raisins	8	7	62,727,000	3.1
Fox Markets	9	8	56,438,000	2.8
Mayfair	10	9	39,303,000	2.0
Total	----------	----------	----------	43.6

The change in the number of stores in the area is indicated by the following computations, the word,

"multiple," meaning units of two or more stores operated as one concern:

	Jan. 1, 1950	Jan. 1, 1961	Jan. 1, 1963
Single	5,385	3,818	3,820
Multiple	836	923	928
	6,221	4,741	4,748

Between 1948 and 1958 the market share of the 20 largest chains increased from 43.8% to 56.9%. The government contends that the merger had the effect of substantially lessening competition in that separate conduits through which substantial quantities of groceries and related products flowed were united into a single organization; also that the merger united purchasing and warehousing functions, the purchase of advertising as well as all other functions which had formerly been carried on by each of the two corporations.

The government industry witnesses were single store operators and in practically every instance testified that in their opinion the merger would lessen competition. In most instances, their opinions were of little assistance since at best they were merely conclusions without supporting data or explanation. The defendants presented numerous industry witnesses who testified that the merger would increase competition rather than decrease it. The government did not cross-examine the defense industry witnesses; but the defendants cross-examined the industry witnesses produced by the government. While the government offered some evidence to account for the decrease in the number of single stores, in the main it predicated its position upon the decrease in the number of such stores with the increase in population at the same time.

Many factors appear to account for the decrease in stores and most of those factors are not necessarily connected with the growth of the chains. For example: in 1931, Safeway had approximately 1,000 stores in the area and today it has only 147. The reason for this appears to be the development of the supermarket, the shopping centers, and the decrease of the small neighborhood grocery store. Furthermore, the shift in the population, the shift in transportation from streetcars to automobiles, and many changes in merchandising methods effected the change to the supermarket era. The evidence as to closed chain stores disclosed many reasons for such closings such as failure of some of the local chains, closings to move to what were considered better locations, closings because of the change to the supermarket store, and in some instances the movement of population. Also many of the disappearing single stores became part of chains of two or more stores. One of the important factors in many of the failures was lack of previous experience in the grocery business; however, it was impossible to arrive at the number of failures in this category. It was impossible to determine the number of closings of grocery stores because of the construction of freeways, although the number must have been substantial.

The evidence showed that many persons had entered into the grocery business in recent years often as single store operators and had been successful in increasing their business from year to year. For example: Wood, a grocer, has developed a 10-store chain since 1954, while Grocer Goodnight left a major chain in 1959 and since 1960 has developed a 7-store chain. Defendants produced at least 10 witnesses who had opened single stores in recent years and who have continued to increase their sales year by year. In each instance, they have been competing with the major chains with stores located close to them. One outstanding example was that of Grocer Gelson, who began with assets of $5,000 in 1946 in a small market in North Hollywood. In 1951, he sold this and ultimately ended up in a market in Encino. His annual sales now are approximately $6,000,000, although he is in competition with stores of the larger chains, the smaller chains, and others.

One thing that stands out in the case is the fact that many executives from chain store operations have left the various chains and opened up stores on their own, usually beginning with a single store and ultimately developing into a small chain of supermarkets. An executive for one of the chains testified that one of the great problems for the larger chains was the loss of executives who were leaving to open grocery businesses of their own. In many instances, these persons have purchased a single store of one of the chains, usually where it was not doing too well, and from that point developed a successful grocery retail business. The experience gained while employed by larger chains has apparently been the basis for the success of many of these operations.

On the other hand, it is to be noted that several of the smaller chains encountered difficulty because of lack of experience, overexpansion, and lack of capitalization and were forced into bankruptcy or compelled to sell. The evidence leaves no doubt that experience in the grocery business has usually made it possible for a person to enter the retail grocery field as a single store operator and be successful.

Witness Lebhar, Editor-in-Chief of "Chain Store Age," which publishes "Chain Store Age," "Shopping Center Age," "Discount Store News," and who is also an officer of the Board of Business Guides, Inc., and other publications, testified that the number of concerns operating two or more grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties increased from 96 in 1953 to 150 in 1962 but that the greatest increase during the period occurred in the number of concerns operating 2 or 3 stores. Such concerns increased 86%—from 56 to 104. His testimony also showed that 7 of the 24 chains which operated 10 or more stores in 1962 were not in business as chains in 1953.

It is interesting to note that in 1948 Safeway accounted for 14.2% of sales in the area and Ralph's, 6.9%, for a total of 21.1%; but in 1958, Safeway and Ralph's combined had declined to 14.3% despite a substantial increase in their sales volume. In other words, during the period when it is claimed that the competitive situation was deteriorating, single store operators and small chains were beginning, growing, and competing successfully.

In 1960, the approximately 4,800 stores in the area were operated by 4,000 separate concerns. During 1960, 128 new "single outlet" stores opened. The leading 20 chains opened 67 new stores in 1960 against 171 by smaller chains and single store operators. While the 10 leading chains accounted for 43.6%, the remainder, including 3,818 single store operators, accounted for 56.4% of the sales in the area in 1960. Another indication of the competitive situation is the fact that Shopping Bag's gross increased while its profits decreased. The witness, Hayden, president of the company, testified that this was occasioned by competition as well as the need for experienced executives.

There was considerable evidence relative to the part played in the grocery business by the so-called cooperatives, namely: the Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., Spartan Cooperative, and Orange Empire. (There is disagreement by the parties as to whether Orange is a cooperative or merely a grocery wholesaler.) Each of these sells only to its members; however, there is apparently no restriction upon those who may become members. The role of the cooperative is of major importance in the distribution of groceries. Certified is wholly owned by the grocery retailers who buy through it. Its membership consists of approximately 900 grocery concerns which operate almost 1,600 retail stores. Spartan Grocers is a wholly owned subsidiary of Certified with approximately 1,200 members who operate 1,255 stores. Most of their members are engaged in business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Certified handles more than 13,000 items, including dry groceries, frozen foods, delicatessen products, and various non-food products, including housewares and appliances.

The evidence indicated that some of the larger chains buy their grocery products through Certified. Certified's annual sales increased from $87,000,000 in 1948 to $345,000,000 in 1962.

Orange Empire with approximately 1,000 members accounted for wholesale sales of $321,000,000 in 1962. Certified, Spartan, and Orange do not carry fresh meat or produce or certain dairy products. Generally speaking, the three, Certified, Spartan, and Orange, are made up of a membership of smaller concerns operating from 1 to 20 stores. In so far as the products which are sold by the 3 cooperatives are concerned, there can be little doubt that the single operator or small grocer can compete effectively with the large chains or anyone else in purchasing such groceries.

As to produce which is not distributed by the 3 cooperatives, the evidence indicates that the single store or small operator could effectively compete in purchasing such produce. The government appeared to contend that the large chains had a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies. However, the evidence failed to support this claim.

Another group now participating in the distribution of groceries is the discount house. The evidence indicates that this phase is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantially additional competitive force. While the development of the discount house apparently indicates a return to the general store, so, in turn, is the supermarket moving more and more toward the concept of a general store. Many of them now include not only groceries but hardware, appliances, liquor, and many other items which in the past have been distributed by specialty stores.

One of the contentions made by the government is that the chains have a distinct advantage over the smaller concerns in obtaining space in the shopping centers. This is probably true since the average builder of a shopping center is anxious to obtain a longtime lease by a large chain with a well advertised name which will attract attention and also induce other large concerns to lease areas in the shopping center. It is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer the company with the greater financial resources. Shopping centers are usually in new developments and require some pioneering. The record does not disclose the number of supermarkets in shopping centers or a definition of "shopping centers."

One of the witnesses for defendants, Campbell Stewart, gave testimony which should be accorded considerable weight. He operated retail grocery stores in the area from 1927 to 1945, at which time he became general manager and vice president of Certified. In 1955 he became president, retiring in 1961 although continuing his employment as consultant to Certified. He pointed out that his organization was started by 15 owners of 1 or 2 stores so that they could pool their purchases and enjoy quantity discounts obtained by the larger concerns. At the time of trial, he testified that Certified is the largest retail-owned food wholesaler in the United States; that Certified is directly concerned by any development in the food retail business which might affect small grocery retailers since they have always been and still are the primary source of Certified's business. He stated that, if the small retailers were placed at a competitive disadvantage, Certified would be adversely affected. He went on to state that in his opinion the merger in question would not tend to substantially lessen competition.

The government's case appears to be predicated upon the following: (1) the union of 2 substantial competitors in the area, (2) increased concentration, (3) a reduction of separate competitive factors, and (4) the elimination of the acquired firm as a separate competitive entity. It will be readily noted that propositions 2, 3, and 4 are necessarily included in proposition 1, that is, the union of 2 substantial competitors. Obviously when 2 substantial competitors merge there has to be increased concentration and a reduction of the separate competitive factors as between the two and the elimination of one as a separate competitive entity. It thus appears that the government in this case is really relying upon a mere union between "2 substantial competitive factors." This, in practical effect, goes back to the Section 7 test which was in effect prior to the amendment of the act in 1950, and was eliminated as was clearly pointed out in the Senate Report. The government argues that over-all competition has been substantially reduced by the merger, but the proof falls short of establishing such to be the case. In fact, the figures relied upon by the government tend to establish to the contrary. Again it is repeated that in 1960 the approximately 4,800 stores in the area were operated by 4,000 separate concerns. The merger here did not materially change that situation. It did not increase or decrease competition store for store with any grocer, single store, or chain, since the acquired stores continued as before. As between stores, only a few of those of Von's and Shopping Bag were in direct competition since generally each company's stores were in different localities of the area. A few did compete directly. Apparently the reason for the failure of the evidence to pinpoint a decrease in competition was because there was actually no decrease.

The parties stipulated to the following, showing the breakdown of concerns in the area in 1962:

Concerns operating:	No. of concerns
10 or more stores	24
4 to 9 stores	22
2 to 3 stores	104
1 store	3,709
Total	3,859

It was also stipulated as follows:

> "4. The following table compares the number of stores operated by and the combined market share of the 20 largest chains in the area in 1958 with the smaller chains and independents.*

*(Reference to footnote omitted.)

	No. of Stores	Market Share
		Govt. Figures	Def. Fig.
Top 20 chains	598	56.9%	54.3%
Independents and smaller chains	4,301	43.1	45.7"

Here it should be noted that the government seeks to have the court disregard evidence of what occurred after March 20, 1960, the date of the filing of the suit. It is difficult to take such a contention seriously in view of the government's reliance upon facts occurring up to as late as January 1, 1963. For example: Government Exhibit 35 sets forth the number of single and multiple stores as of January 1, 1963, and the government in its proposed findings of fact included these figures. The government's proposed findings of fact also set out figures for both 1961 and 1962 repeating single and multiple stores. Suffice it to say that both Brown Shoe and DuPont refer to facts occurring after suit was filed and during the pendency of the suit. It would indeed be an incongruity for a court to close its eyes to facts which would, with a reasonable degree of certainty, establish whether or not there was reasonable probability of the lessening of competition and predicate its decision solely upon prediction or prognosis. A court of equity cannot at the time of its decree disregard changed conditions since the filing of the suit or adopt a conclusion that has since proved to be unwarranted.

The evidence respecting the economic conditions existing during the years, 1961, 1962, 1963, would appear to be far more reliable as a guide in determining the effect of the merger than the "prognosis" mentioned in Brown Shoe.

One of the principal witnesses for the government supplied evidence which is of material benefit to a determination of this case. He was Ward Jenssen, a market consultant who has worked for a number of chains such as Food Giant, Ralph's, Market Basket, and others. From his research it was developed that customers of supermarkets take various things into consideration including the following: price, general appearance of the store, size and variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, check stand service, cleanliness of the store, etc. The average customer is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about 4 miles, to shop. Jenssen found that shoppers are willing to pass by other stores in order to go to a specific store which they believed well met their top demands. Research has thus indicated what the shopper wants. The supermarket usually offers most of these things, while the corner grocery cannot. In its "Summary of the Facts" the government states that the decline in the number of individual grocery stores resulted "largely from increasing size of supermarkets * * * and fewer stores are needed to serve a comparable number of people." This appears to account for the decrease in the number of stores and it apparently is what the consumer desires.

The evidence showed that the average shopper has from 2 to 10 competing stores within convenient distance to shop. To increase the number of stores in the area may sound good but to do so may well require a return to the corner grocery and the elimination of the services and quality and variety of products which the public now seems to demand. One thing does appear: Price reduction has gone about as far as possible. The remaining factor is service to the customer and his convenience. An effort to get up an economic environment to equalize competitors in the grocery business will not only destroy the competitive factors which afford the public the benefits which they are now receiving but may well result in much higher prices. The key to success in the grocery business in the area does not appear to rest upon the number of stores operated but how they are operated. From all of the economic factors disclosed, there appears generally to have been a change from the small corner grocery to the supermarket. This would seem to be the main reason for the decrease in the number of stores in the area.

The evidence discloses that the competition in the area appears to remain vigorous, open to anyone and especially those with experience and training, and the consumer is reaping the full benefit. From the evidence, it cannot be concluded that the merger in question would probably lessen competition in the metropolitan area either at the time of the merger or in the foreseeable future. The defendants are entitled to judgment.

Counsel for the defendants is directed to prepare proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment pursuant to Rule 58, F.R.C.P., and to serve and lodge the same with the clerk of the court within 30 days, and plaintiff shall have 15 days thereafter to serve and file objections thereto.

Dated: September 14, 1964.

APPENDIX B

United States District Court, Southern District of California, Central Division

Civil No. 336-60-CC

v.

VON'S GROCERY CO. AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES, DEFENDANTS

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

The above-entitled matter having come on regularly for trial on June 11, 1963 before the Honorable Charles Carr, Judge of the above-entitled Court; plaintiff United States of America being represented by James J. Coyle, John F. Hughes and Malcolm F. Knight, and defendants being represented by Johnson, Bates & Sheffield, by James E. Bates, and O'Melveny & Myers, by William W. Alsup and William W. Vaughn; and evidence, both oral and documentary, having been received; and the matter having been reopened on March 23, 1964 for the taking of further evidence and for oral argument; whereupon the case was submitted for decision;

Now, therefore, the Court, being fully advised in the premises, does hereby make the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. As of March 25, 1960, when this action was commenced, defendant Von's Grocery Co. (hereinafter Von's) operated 28 grocery stores, all of which were located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, and Von's was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

2. Von's is a Delaware corporation and is the successor to a family partnership which entered the retail grocery business in 1932 by undertaking to operate the grocery concession in a small grocery store in the City of Lynwood, Los Angeles County, California.

3. Thereafter, Von's opened other stores until in 1948 it was operating 14 grocery stores whose total sales were approximately $21,794,000. In 1954, Von's had 19 stores and sales of $63,730,000. In 1958, it had 27 stores and a sales volume of approximately $93,703,000. This amounted to approximately 4.7% of total grocery store sales and 4.2% of total food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, meaning that in terms of sales Von's ranked third among all grocery concerns operating in those two counties. Both Safeway and Ralphs had greater sales. In terms of number of stores, Von's ranked eighth behind Safeway (154 stores), Alpha Beta (48 stores), Thriftimart (43 stores), Market Basket (39 stores), Shopping Bag (34 stores), Ralphs (34 stores), and Fox (34 stores). In 1959 Von's had 28 stores and sales of approximately $86,606,000, or an average of approximately $3,000,000 in sales per store. The Von's supermarkets are of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.

4. For the most part, Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

5. Von's also owned and operated a modern distribution center; direct railroad and truck shipments were made to this distribution center which provided facilities to receive and distribute the groceries to Von's supermarkets throughout the Los Angeles area. After the merger with Shopping Bag hereinafter described, Von's sold its distribution center to a competitor and has since used the former Shopping Bag distribution center.

6. As of March 25, 1960, Shopping Bag Food Stores (hereinafter Shopping Bag) was a California corporation operating 36 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, and two grocery stores in San Bernardino County, California. Shopping Bag was one of the leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

7. Shopping Bag was the successor to a partnership consisting of W. R. Hayden and W. B. Rorex, which began business in 1930 with the operation of a grocery concession in a small grocery store in Los Angeles County. The partnership commenced operating a grocery concession in a second store in 1931. It added two more grocery concessions in 1932 and two more in 1933. In that year the partnership was dissolved and a corporation, Shopping Bag Markets, formed to succeed it. In 1947, the corporation's name was changed to Shopping Bag Food Stores.

8. By 1945, Shopping Bag had 12 stores and was operating all the concessions in them. In that year, W. D. Rorex retired and thereafter the majority of the stock in Shopping Bag was owned by W. R. Hayden and his family.

9. Shopping Bag continued to expand its business. In 1948, Shopping Bag had 15 stores and sales of approximately $11,396,000. In 1954, it had 23 stores and sales of approximately $52,444,000. In 1958, it had 36 stores and approximately $90,531,000 in sales. Two of these stores were in San Bernardino County. The remaining 34 in Los Angeles and Orange Counties had sales of approximately $84,164,000 in 1958.

This gave Shopping Bag approximately 4.2% of total grocery stores sales and 3.8% of total food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, meaning that Shopping Bag ranked sixth in terms of sales behind Safeway, Ralphs, Von's, Market Basket and Thriftimart, and fifth in number of stores (see Finding 3). In 1959, with 38 stores (two of which were outside the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area), Shopping Bag had sales of approximately $84,404,000, or an average of $2,100,000 sales per store; all of its stores were of the self-service, cash-and-carry type.

10. For the most part, Shopping Bag stores were located in the northern and eastern portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

11. On March 28, 1960, Shopping Bag was merged into Von's. Shopping Bag shareholders received Von's stock in return for their Shopping Bag stock.

12. Many of the factors which affected the officers and directors in consummating the merger of the two corporations were:

(a) The operations of the two chains complemented each other with little overlap in the geographical areas each served.

(b) Prior to the merger, W. R. Hayden was the most actively responsible officer and stockholder carrying on the affairs of Shopping Bag's business. The management of the company was in his hands and he was assisted by only a few other executives. By 1959 it was apparent that Shopping Bag's earnings and profits were declining, even though its sales were increasing. This was a matter of grave concern to Shopping Bag and to its president and principal stockholder, Mr. Hayden. The following table shows Shopping Bag's total sales, net income, percentage of net income to total sales and percentage of net profit after taxes to total assets for the years 1957, 1958 and 1959. For purposes of comparison, the same fiscal information for Von's is also set forth:

SHOPPING BAG

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Profit to Total Assets
1957	$87,007,857	$1,360,888	1.6%	6.6%
1958	90,531,209	912,851	1.0%	3.9%
1959 [1]	94,403,865	770,122	.9%	3.2%

VON'S

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Profit to Total Assets
1957	$89,990,056	$1,872,943	2.1%	12.7%
1958	94,463,993	1,947,367	2.1%	12.4%
1959 [1]	86,603,829	1,981,358	2.3%	10.9%

[1] A four-week strike in January 1959, resulted in lower sales for each company in that year.

(c) After more than 30 years in the grocery business, Mr. Hayden wanted to become less active but he was concerned about what would happen to Shopping Bag if he were to do so because Shopping Bag did not have a strong managememnt staff to take over his responsibilities. Von's had a superior organization and a management team which was capable of operating a chain of 60 or 70 stores.

(d) It was anticipated that (and this has proved to be the case) the merger would result in greater efficiency and lower operating costs for the two companies combined than they could have achieved otherwise. Savings would be realized primarily in overhead, general and administrative, advertising, warehousing, and distribution expenses.

(e) Prior to the merger, the Von der Ahe family owned 80% of Von's stock and the Hayden family held 60% of Shopping Bag's stock. It was recognized that the death of any member of either family who held a large number of these shares might create estate tax problems requiring the forced sale of stock in order to meet death taxes. The merger gave Von's 5,344 public stockholders and a much broader and more active market for its stock. By reason of the merger, Von's was able to meet the listing qualifications of the New York Stock Exchange and, accordingly, Von's stock was listed on that Exchange in 1961. The merger has resulted in a more favorable market atmosphere for the disposal of stock by either the Von der Ahe or Hayden families.

13. Shopping Bag had expanded rapidly through internal growth. However, it suffered from a shortage of qualified executive personnel.

14. The parties have agreed and the Court finds that the relevant line of commerce in this case is groceries and related products taken as a whole. These are the products usually and customarily offered for sale in supermarkets and grocery stores, and consist of groceries, meats, produce, bakery goods, dairy products, delicatessen products, frozen foods, fruits, vegetables, household supplies, drugs and sundries; in 1959 the sale of food products accounted for 90% of all sales by grocery stores in the area.

15. The parties have agreed and the Court finds that the relevant section of the country in this case is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, which is defined as Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California. Los Angeles ranks as the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in terms of population, income and retail dollar sales; approximately 6,750,000 persons resided in the area and total retail sales were approximately $9,100,000,000 in 1957. The Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is an appreciable trade area and a section of the country within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act; sales of groceries in the area approximate $2,500,000,000 annually.

16. The plaintiff made no attempt to predicate its case upon the basis that suppliers had been eliminated or adversely affected by the merger.

17. In the 1920's and 1930's, the grocery business in Los Angeles was being conducted from small, corner grocery stores. In these stores, usually one man or one company would operate the grocery concession or department, another the meat concession, another the produce concession, and so on. Sales in a typical store of this character were from $2,000 to $2,500 a week. Few housewives had automobiles at their disposal during the day. Consequently, they usually had to walk to the grocery store where they did their shopping. This meant that the area from which the typical store drew most of its customers was limited to a block or two in any direction and if a particular grocery store happened to be the only one in its immediate neighborhood, it had a virtual monopoly of local trade. In the 1920's there were a number of "chains" doing business in Los Angeles. They included Piggly Wiggly, E. A. Morrison, Humpty Dumpty, Crown Emporium, Ralphs, and Von's (a company then owned by Charles A. Von der Ahe, the father of the men who started and still operate the present Von's). These chains operated from 10 to 90 grocery concessions in small grocery stores. In addition, there were a number of smaller concerns operating less than ten grocery concessions as well as many who operated only one concession.

18. Between 1927 and 1929, MacMarr Stores acquired the then Von's, E. A. Morrison, Humpty Dumpty, Crown Emporium and other chains in Los Angeles. Later, Safeway Stores acquired Piggly Wiggly, and in 1931, Safeway acquired MacMarr. This gave Safeway over 1,000 stores in the Los Angeles area.

19. During the 1930's, Safeway was the leading chain in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles. Ralphs was also operating a successful chain. Concerns which were later to become larger, such as the present Von's, Shopping Bag, Market Basket, Thriftimart or their predecessors, started with one store in or about 1932.

20. Starting in the late 1930's, the concept of a grocery store being divided up into concessions or departments operated under separate ownerships began to undergo a change. Certain concerns commenced to operate all departments in their stores.

21. In the early 1940's, another change in grocery retailing began to take place—a trend toward larger stores, called supermarkets, which offered a greater number and variety of products. Automobiles were more widely owned in the 1940's and many people chose to drive to the grocery store, meaning that it was desirable for a store to provide parking facilities. Many of the new supermarkets had parking lots. In view of their larger size, parking facilities and other attractions, supermarkets began drawing customers from a wider area than had the grocery stores of the 1920's and 1930's.

22. During World War II, there was a building moratorium, but as soon as the war was over, many new supermarkets were constructed in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, keeping pace with the population explosion which this area was experiencing.

23. The change in the number of stores in the area is indicated by the following computations in which the word "multiple" means units of two or more stores operated by one concern:

	January 1, 1950	January 1, 1961	January 1, 1963
Single	5,365	3,818	3,620
Multiple	856	923	928
Total	6,221	4,741	4,548

The foregoing figures appear to be the most reliable which could be obtained.

24. The following are some of the reasons for the decline in the number of stores in the period January 1, 1950 to January 1, 1963:

(a) The development of the supermarket and the shopping centers led to a decrease of the number of small neighborhood grocery stores of both single store operators and the chains;

(b) The shift in population, the shift in transportation from street cars to automobiles and the many changes in merchandising methods which effected the change to the supermarket era;

(c) Failures of some of the local chains and single store operators;

(d) Closings to move to better locations;

(e) Failures due to lack of experience in the grocery business (although it was impossible to arrive at the number of failures in this category);

(f) Closings because of the construction of the freeway system (and while the number must have been substantial it was impossible to determine the number of such closings);

(g) Many people seemed to prefer the supermarket with its greater variety of products, greater parking convenience, better service, more modern appearance, and the like;

(h) The supermarket, being larger in size, could serve the same number of people as two or three of the older, smaller stores, and hence a fewer number of stores were needed.

25. In 1948, Safeway operated a large number of stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and had sales amounting to 14.2% of total grocery store sales in the area. Ralphs had 32 stores and 6.9% of the area's total grocery store sales. No other concern had as many as 30 stores or as much as 3% of the area's total grocery store sales. For example, Mayfair had 22 stores and 2.4% of the total grocery store sales in the market. Market Basket had 26 stores and 2.2% of the market. Von's had 14 stores and 2.4% of the market. Shopping Bag had 15 stores and 1.2% of the market.

26. The 1950's were characterized by vigorous competition. Population continued to increase and so did the construction of new grocery outlets. Despite the decline in number of stores referred to in Finding 22 above, the evidence showed that there is scarcely a single household in Los Angeles and Orange Counties which does not have a choice of from three to ten competing grocery stores within convenient shopping distance.

27. The 1950's were also characterized by the entry into the market of new concerns and the growth of existing smaller concerns. The market leaders, Safeway and Ralphs, were not able to maintain their pre-existing share of the total grocery store sales in the face of this increased competition. For example:

(a) In 1948, Safeway and Ralphs together had total sales in the area of approximately $193.5 million. This represented 21.1% of all grocery store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In 1958, Safeway and Ralphs had combined sales of nearly $288 million but their combined share of the total grocery store business had declined to 14.3%. Safeway's percentage market share declined from 14.2% to 8% in this period and Ralphs from 6.9% to 6.4%. Thus, despite the fact that these two leaders had increased their respective sales in ten years, they nevertheless lost ground in terms of share of the market to other concerns.

(b) This loss of market position is attributable to the success and growth of smaller concerns. In 1953, there were 96 concerns operating two or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. By 1962, there were 150 such concerns operating a total of 1,085 stores. The greatest increase in number of competitors occurred in the case of concerns operating two or three stores. In 1953, there were 56 of them. In 1962, there were 104, an increase of 86%. In addition, in 1962 there were 22 concerns with from four to nine stores each, and 24 concerns (including Safeway and Ralphs) with 10 or more stores each. Seven of the 24 concerns with 10 or more stores in 1962 opened their second market sometime after 1953. Moreover, as of the end of 1961 there were approximately 3,800 single store operators doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

28. The opportunities for entry, success and growth of smaller concerns can be illustrated by examples of some of the grocery businesses which have been started or have experienced growth since 1950:

(a) Hughes Markets—Joseph P. Hughes left the employ of Thriftimart in 1952 and opened the first Hughes Market. By 1958, Hughes had opened six more new stores and the company's annual sales exceeded $21 million. By 1963, Hughes had a total of 13 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

(b) Shoppers Markets—Shoppers Markets started with one store in 1942. In 1949 it added its second store. It opened another in 1950, another in 1952, another in 1956, three in 1958, four more in 1961 and another in 1962. Today Shoppers is a 14-store chain.

(c) Pantry Food Markets—For 21 years, Ted R. Wood was an employee of Alpha Beta. In 1954, Mr. Wood left Alpha Beta to start his own business. He and seven others invested their savings, a total of $48,000, in a grocery store in Pasadena which was opened for business in March, 1955. This was the beginning of Pantry Food Markets. Another store was opened in July, 1955. A third store was added in 1956, a fourth in 1957, and a fifth in 1958. Between June, 1959 and December, 1961, Pantry opened five new stores, bringing its total to 10.

(d) Food Giant—In 1954, Food Giant had two stores. By 1958 it had 19. In 1960 it had 29. By October, 1962, it had grown to a 53-store chain and by February, 1963, it had opened six additional stores, giving it a total of 59. Some of Food Giant's stores were acquired from other companies, but most of them were new supermarkets opened for the first time by Food Giant.

(e) The Boys Markets—The first Boys Market was opened in the 1920's. The company slowly expanded to a nine-store chain in 1958. By 1963, it was operating 25 stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

(f) Michael's Markets—Prior to 1960, Joe B. Goodnight was an employee of Alpha Beta. He left his position with that concern to open the first Michael's Market on July 28, 1960. By October, 1962, Michael's Markets was operating a chain of seven supermarkets in Orange County.

(g) Gelson's Markets—Eugene and Bernard Gelson started in business in 1946 by purchasing a 700 square foot market in North Hollywood for $5,000, their combined savings at the time. By 1962, the Gelsons had built and were operating two of the largest supermarkets in Los Angeles County. One of them, located in Burbank, is 26,000 square feet in size. It was opened in 1951. The other, opened in Encino in March, 1960, has 37,000 square feet and enjoys annual sales of approximately $6,000,000.

29. A history of the retail grocery business in Los Angeles would be incomplete without reference to the significance of cooperative buying. In 1922, fifteen of the smaller grocery retailers concluded that they could more effectively compete against some of the chains then doing business in Los Angeles and that they should take action to become more competitive. Having difficulty competing effectively because those chains could buy their groceries directly from suppliers in large enough quantities to afford them quantity discounts, while the operator of one or two stores had to purchase groceries in smaller quantities and at higher prices from wholesalers; as a result chain stores could profitably sell their merchandise at prices which were sometimes lower than the prices which the small retailer paid his wholesaler for the same merchandise. Accordingly, these fifteen grocers decided to pool their resources and buy their groceries directly from suppliers through one common warehouse. This afforded them the same advantages of direct buying and quantity discounts which the larger chains enjoyed.

30. This method of purchasing proved successful. In 1924, a corporation named Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. was formed to carry on the cooperative buying of groceries. This corporation was and still is wholly owned by the grocery retailers who buy through it. Certified buys in large quantities at favorable prices, warehouses its grocery products and then distributes them to its stockholders (called "members") who are its only customers.

31. Today, Certified is the largest retailer-owned food wholesaler in the United States. Its membership consists of 873 retail grocery concerns which operate approximately 1,557 retail stores. In addition, Certified's wholly-owned subsidiary, Spartan Grocers, has 1200 members who operate 1255 stores. Most of Certified's and Spartan's members do business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, although Certified does serve some members in other parts of Southern California as well as in Arizona, Nevada and elsewhere.

32. Certified handles more than 13,000 items, consisting of dry groceries, frozen foods, delicatessen products and certain non-food products such as health and beauty aids, housewares and appliances. Certified deals primarily in branded items but does have certain products available under its private label, Springfield. By reason of the large volume in which Certified makes its purchases, its members can buy these products through Certified on a competitive basis with the larger chains. Some of the larger chains buy their grocery products through Certified.

33. Certified operates one warehouse which is 335,280 square feet in size, another warehouse which is about half that size, a coffee processing plant, a bean packaging plant and a frozen food warehouse. It has 340 trucks which travel more than 2½ million miles a year delivering merchandise to Certified's member stores. Certified also provides its members with assistance in merchandising, advertising, promotions and inventory control.

34. In 1948, Certified's wholesale sales to its members reached a then all-time high of $87 million. By 1954, its annual sales were $198 million and in 1962 they were $345 million. Thus, in the 14 years since 1948, Certified's sales to its members increased by more than 400%. The volume of Certified's purchases exceeds by a large measure the volume of purchases of any chain which does business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, with the exception of large national chains such as A&P, Safeway, and Acme Stores (Alpha Beta).

35. Orange Empire Co-op, a buying cooperative sponsored by A. M. Lewis Co., offers substantially the same products, services and advantages to its members as Certified. Orange Empire has more than 1000 members, a large number of which do business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In 1945, Orange Empire's wholesale sales amounted to less than $13 million. In 1961 its wholesale sales were approximately $280 million. In 1962, its wholesale sales were $321 million.

36. The membership of Certified is made up mainly of small grocery retailers which are the primary source of Certified's business. About the only grocery concerns doing business in Los Angeles or Orange Counties which do not belong to and buy from one cooperative or another are the very small so-called "Mom and Pop" stores and a few, but not all, of the large chains. The single store operator or small grocer, by reason of membership in Certified, Orange Empire, or Spartan, can compete successfully with the large chains in purchasing products carried by such cooperatives.

37. Many of this area's leading chains commenced business here with one store, and the opportunity to buy through a cooperative.

38. Certified, Spartan and Orange Empire do not carry fresh meat or produce or certain dairy items. The single store or small operator can effectively compete in purchasing produce. The evidence fails to support the plaintiff's claim that the large chains have a substantial advantage in the purchase of meat supplies or dairy items.

39. Competition in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles, as in other retail businesses, is a contest for the patronage of consumers. Direct competition usually exists between any two stores only to the extent that they vie for the patronage of the same customers, although the evidence showed that there is a network of competition in the area in the sense that stores respond to competitive practices initiated by a competitor. In some densely populated areas, a store's draw area will often be limited to less than a mile. The average customer is willing to drive for at least 10 minutes, equivalent to about four miles, to shop and to pass by other stores in order to go to a specific store which she believes will meet her top demands. In some localities, natural or man-made barriers such as hills, freeways, railroad tracks and the like will limit a store's draw area. The limitation thus imposed on the draw area of any particular store means that it is in substantial competition only with other stores in the same immediate vicinity. A store in Santa Monica does not compete directly with a store 20 miles away in Pasadena. Each of those stores competes directly only with stores nearby and then only to the extent that they can attract the same customers. Chains with stores in many communities compete with concerns, both large and small, which also have stores in those communities. On the other hand, a concern with only one store competes directly only with concerns operating stores nearby.

40. Customers of supermarkets take various things into consideration in choosing a market at which to shop, including the following: Price, general appearance of the store, size, variety of brands, parking space, whether the store is in a shopping center or is a free-standing store, general familiarity with the store's reputation, quality of meat, quality of produce, courteous service and cleanliness of the store.

41. Prior to the merger, the twenty leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area were all a part of the retail grocery competition in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and as such each of these chains competed with each other and with other corporations and firms engaged in the purchase, distribution and retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As a part of the competition, the major chains as well as other grocers frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains. Competition between individual Von's and Shopping Bag stores was limited to those instances where a store of each company was so located that both could compete for some of the same customers. In such instances, "the competition was intensive."

42. Prior to the merger, both Von's and Shopping Bag were substantial competitive factors in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and said area is a substantial and significant economic market.

43. During the last thirty years, the smaller grocery concerns doing business in Los Angeles and Orange Counties—concerns operating one, two or three stores—have proven their ability to compete with each other and with stores operated by larger concerns. As noted in Finding 37, many of today's chains entered the grocery business in Los Angeles with one store and were able to grow. Many others have chosen to stay small but they, too, have operated and continue to operate successful businesses.

44. The following examples of successful smaller concerns doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area illustrate the competitive opportunity available to firms of any size:

(a) Reynold Elkin, after 18 years of experience as an employee of various chains, acquired an older store in Inglewood in 1958. Directly across the street was a newer, larger Safeway store and within a mile of this store is a Von's, a Thriftimart, a Fox and a number of single stores. Mr. Elkin has increased his sales by 400% since 1958.

(b) Harlos Gross purchased an old Shopping Bag store in Temple City in 1953. His sales were $600,000 in the first year of operation, but have exceeded $1,000,000 in every year since then despite the fact that after 1953 twelve new grocery stores, many of them operated by larger chains, opened up within a radius of two miles of his store.

(c) Albert Goldstein was an executive of Boys Markets from 1933 to 1958 and Vice President and General Manager of Food Giant from 1958 to October, 1962, during which time Food Giant grew from a 19 to a 53-store chain. In October, 1962, Mr. Goldstein went into business on his own by purchasing an older Food Giant store directly across the street from a newly opened Von's store located in a large shopping center. Mr. Goldstein can and does operate this store successfully in competition with Food Giant and in the face of the new competition from Von's.

(d) Joseph Goldberg was a former executive of King Cole, Inc., a six-store chain. In March, 1961, that chain disbanded and Mr. Goldberg took over operation of one of its stores in Whittier. This store is within 100 yards of a Safeway and a Food Giant, both of which stores are larger and newer than Mr. Goldberg's. Under King Cole, this market had sales of $2.9 million a year. In the first year of its operation under Mr. Goldberg's ownership, its sales were $3.5 million.

(e) Lester Eaton, a government witness, purchased a small grocery store in La Puente in 1952. At the time, Mr. Eaton was 24 years old and his only experience in the grocery business consisted of working as a clerk for six months in the store he acquired. Mr. Eaton's initial investment in the business was $1,000, his total savings at the time. In the next ten years, Mr. Eaton increased sales in his store from $72,000 to $450,000 a year, despite the fact that various of the larger chains opened new stores nearby. With profits made from the operation of his store, Mr. Eaton has purchased a $30,000 parcel of real property on which he plans to build a new supermarket.

(f) Paul Palmer, another Government witness, started in the grocery business in 1946. At that time, his total capital assets amounted to $16,000. Today he is the sole stockholder of Country Cousins, Inc. which successfully operates a four-store chain and which has annual sales of more than $6,000,000 and a net worth of between $1½ and $2 million.

(g) Jerry Fleishman, another witness for the Government, was discharged from his position with Shoppers Markets at the age of 45. In 1956, he acquired a small grocery store in Los Angeles. In the next five years, Mr. Fleishman earned more money from this small store than he had made in all the preceding years of his life.

45. There are no substantial barriers to entry into the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

46. Seven of the 24 concerns operating 10 or more stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area in 1961 opened their second store sometime after 1952. Concerns operating two or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties increased in number from 96 to 150 from 1953 to 1962, with the greatest numerical increase appearing in concerns which operated two or three stores.

47. Records of the State Board of Equalization show that in 1960, 128 grocery stores were opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area by concerns which apparently were new entrants. In the same year, there were 119 openings by concerns operating at least one other store.

48. Eighteen of the 30 government industry witnesses and 10 of the defendant's industry witnesses commenced their present businesses subsequent to the year 1948.

49. Many executives from chain store operations have left the various chains and opened up stores on their own, usually beginning with a single store and ultimately developing into a small chain of supermarkets. One of the great problems for the larger chains is the loss of executives who leave to open grocery businesses of their own. In many instances these persons have purchased a single store of one of the chains, usually where it was not doing too well, and from that point developed a successful grocery retail business. The experience gained while employed by larger chains has apparently been the basis for the success of many of these operations. There is no doubt that experience in the grocery business has usually made it possible for a person to enter the retail grocery field as a single-store operator and be successful. On the other hand, several of the chains encountered difficulty because of lack of experience, over-expansion and lack of capitalization and were forced into bankruptcy or compelled to sell.

50. As a result of its merger with Shopping Bag, Von's in 1960 ranked second behind Safeway in terms of both sales and number of stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The warehousing and distribution facilities of Von's and Shopping Bag were combined and personnel of the two concerns were realigned under a single management. None of the stores of the two concerns was closed. Each store continued to operate under either the name "Von's" or the name "Von's-Shopping Bag."

51. The merger of Shopping Bag into Von's did not materially change the competitive situation in the area. It did not increase or decrease competition store for store with any grocery concern, whether single store or chain, since the acquired stores continued as before.

52. The merger has had no adverse effect on competition in the more than four years since it was consummated. Competition prior to the merger was intense and vigorous and it is no less so today. There is no evidence from which it could be concluded that there is a reasonable probability of any lessening of competition in the foreseeable future.

53. It is difficult to determine with precision exactly what draw area a particular store has. Nevertheless, it appears that Von's and Shopping Bag stores were actually directly competing for some of the same customers in only four or five areas of the entire Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In each of these areas there were, and still are, at least six other stores operated by chains as well as a number of stores operated by smaller concerns competing with Von's and Shopping Bag for the patronage of customers. Any elimination of competition between Von's and Shopping Bag stores as a result of the merger would not have, and in fact has not had, any discernible effect on competition generally in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

54. Shopping center developers prefer to deal with a large grocery chain with a well-advertised name which will attract attention and also induce other large concerns to lease areas in the shopping center. Also, it is only natural that the shopping center owner would prefer a company with the greater financial resources. As a result, the larger chains with greater financial resources are most often sought after as shopping center tenants and smaller concerns therefore have difficulty in obtaining shopping center locations. Not all good grocery store locations are in shopping centers. Prior to the merger Von's was able to and it did obtain shopping center locations.

55. Prior to the merger both Von's and Shopping Bag bought directly from suppliers and operated their own warehouses and their own trucks by means of which merchandise was distributed to their stores. Many chains undertake to buy, warehouse and distribute some or all of their merchandise rather than have these functions performed for them by a cooperative because they deem it desirable to do so in order to assure adequate inventory control and to better control their greater distribution problems which necessarily arise in the operation of a number of stores. Prior to the merger, both Von's and Shopping Bag bought directly from suppliers, operated their own warehouses and their own distribution systems, and since the merger Von's has continued to do so.

56. The acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's has not resulted in an undue reduction in the number of competing enterprises in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

57. There was and for the foreseeable future appears to be no reasonable probability that the acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's will have the effect of unduly reducing the number of competing enterprises in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

58. The Von's-Shopping Bag merger was not likely to, has not, and is not likely adversely to affect competition generally or otherwise in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. However, other events have occurred since the merger which have affected and on the whole caused an increase in competition.

59. In the year 1960, 246 new grocery stores were opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, of which 128 were new "single outlet" stores. 67 of these 246 new stores were opened by the area's twenty leading chains. 179 were opened by smaller concerns.[1] Of these 246 stores only three were opened by Von's or Shopping Bag.

60. Since the merger American Stores (now Acme Stores, Inc.), the nation's fourth largest retail grocery chain, has entered the Los Angeles market by acquiring Alpha Beta Food Stores; and Food Fair, the nation's sixth largest retail grocery concern, has entered the Los Angeles market by acquiring a number of the stores formerly operated by the bankrupt Fox Markets. Food Fair has also commenced operating grocery concessions in discount houses in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. On September 3, 1963, Kroger Company, the nation's third largest grocery chain, entered this market by acquiring Market Basket, one of the largest local chains.

61. Prior to the merger, the sale of groceries and related products in so-called discount houses was virtually unknown. Since the merger, this new form of grocery merchandising has become increasingly popular in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Today there are approximately 35 discount houses with food departments in that area, and the evidence indicates that this form of grocery merchandising is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantial additional competitive force. Typically, these discount houses are large retail establishments which sell all types of products, including appliances, soft goods and more recently groceries, at prices which are generally lower than can be found in other retail outlets. These lower prices are made possible primarily through savings which are realized in labor and overhead costs. For example, most discount house food departments have less elaborate fixtures than many supermarkets and they remain open for a shorter period of time each day, thereby avoiding overtime labor costs and the like. Retail grocery concerns such as Food Giant, Thriftimart, Lucky Stores, Food Fair, and Mayfair, as well as smaller concerns such as Foods Co. and Supreme Foods, have commenced operating food departments in discount houses since the merger. It has been shown that most discount houses have a draw area of six miles or more. The majority of the Von's-Shopping Bag stores are within six miles of a discount house.

[1] Statistics with respect to store openings in later years have not been made available.

62. Since the merger, an increasing number of bantam stores, or superettes as they are sometimes called, have been opened in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

63. Another development since the merger has been the opening of so-called drive-in milk depots. These establishments are small retail outlets which sell milk, other dairy products, bread, wieners, and other convenience items. These milk depots have a natural competitive advantage in that they are permitted under regulations issued pursuant to the California Milk Control Act to sell milk at a lesser price than conventional grocery stores. There were few such milk depots in 1960; today they account for 16% of all the milk sold in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

775-995—65——5

64. Other types of retail establishments, notably liquor stores and drug stores, are selling an increasing number and amount of products usually found in grocery stores. Some liquor stores now sell more bread than some supermarkets, and the sales of grocery products in some liquor stores exceed the sales of some "Mom and Pop" grocery stores.

65. There is no reliable evidence that as of the date of the merger on March 28, 1960 there was a reasonable probability that the merger would result in a substantial lessening of competition in the purchase, distribution or retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area.

66. In the more than four years since it took place, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger has not resulted in any lessening of competition in the purchase, distribution or retail sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, and there is no reasonable probability that in the foreseeable future it will have such an effect.

67. The retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is now and for many years has been a highly competitive business characterized by a large number of firms competing for the business available at reasonable prices.

68. As of the date of the merger on March 28, 1960, there was not a reasonable probability that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products would be adversely affected by the merger.

69. There is no evidence that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products has been adversely affected by the merger.

70. There is no reasonable probability that any retail purchaser of groceries and related products will be adversely affected by the merger.

71. The effect of the merger is not substantial. Von's faces and will continue to face strong and vigorous competition. There is no reliable evidence that this merger is likely to have an adverse effect on prices or on the quality of service rendered the public.

72. In the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area there is an abundance of strong, competing sellers, a wide choice of competing stores from which the purchasing public may conveniently choose to shop, a lack of obstacles restraining new entrants into the business, and a lack of power in the defendant or others to control prices, supply or entry. All of these factors tend to insure continued vigorous competition.

73. As of the date of the merger, there were more than 4,000 separate concerns operating more than 4,800 grocery stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. After the merger, Von's was operating a total of 64 stores—less than 1.4% of the total number of stores in the two counties.

74. In 1958, i.e., two years prior to the merger, Von's percentage of sales of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area was 4.7% and Shopping Bag's was 4.2%, as compared to the 8% of Safeway and 6.4% of Ralphs. After the merger, however, on March 28, 1960, Von's did not become the market leader in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. In the year 1960, Safeway Stores operated 146 grocery stores in the area, the sales of which were $184,313,000. This represented approximately 8% of total grocery store sales and 7.4% of total food store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. In the same year, Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger and Von's after the merger operated a total of 66 stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. These stores had sales of $172,488,000 in 1960 which represents 7.5% of total grocery store sales and 6.9% of total food store sales in the two counties.

75. Both Von's and Shopping Bag were local concerns of local origin, both having commenced business in the 1930's with one store and having grown a store at a time thereafter. (See Findings 1 through 9.) Von's is still a local concern. All but 8 of its stores are located in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. The remaining 8 are located in adjoining counties (i.e., San Bernardino, San Diego and Ventura.) Also doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area are the following, all of which have stores in competition with one or more Von's stores:

(a) The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (A&P), the largest retail grocery concern in the United States, which in 1962 had a total of 4,475 stores located in 38 states and Canada, sales in excess of $5 billion a year and assets in excess of $767 million.

(b) Safeway Stores, Incorporated, the nation's second largest retail grocery concern, which in 1962 had several thousand stores in 29 states and Canada, sales in excess of $2.5 billion annually and assets of more than $473 million.

(c) Alpha Beta-Acme, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Acme Stores, Inc. (formerly American Stores), the fourth largest retail grocery concern in America. Acme Stores, Inc. in 1962 had 845 stores, sales in excess of $1 billion annually and assets of more than $209 million.

(d) Food Fair Stores, Inc., the nation's sixth largest grocery chain which in 1962 had 465 stores in ten states, sales of nearly $1 billion a year and assets of $193 million.

(e) Mayfair Markets, which in 1962 operated 178 supermarkets in California, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, had sales in excess of $288 million annually, and total assets of more than $62 million.

(f) Lucky Stores, Inc., which in 1962 operated 141 supermarkets in California, Arizona and Washington, had sales of more than $232 million annually and total assets in excess of $47 million.

76. The Kroger Co., the nation's third largest chain, which did not previously do business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, has now acquired Market Basket, a local chain with 55 stores located primarily in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. Kroger in 1962 had a total of 1,354 grocery stores in 23 states, annual sales of nearly $2 billion, and total assets of more than $400 million.

77. In addition, there are approximately 17 "local" chains operating 10 or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties (seven of which were not operating as many as two stores as late as 1952), 126 other concerns operating two or more stores in those counties and several thousand single-store operators.

78. The acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's did not result in any appreciable increase in the level of concentration measured in terms of the market share of the leading concerns doing business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, even as reflected by plaintiff's Exhibit 8. According to that exhibit, the share of the business accounted for by the 12 largest firms, for example, increased from 48.8% to 50.0%, or by only 1.2%, and the market share of the top twenty increased from 56.9% to 57.4%, or by only ½ of 1%.

79. The area's leading twenty concerns in 1950 enjoyed sales which amounted to approximately 40% of total grocery store sales in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The twenty leading chains in 1960 had sales amounting to approximately 54% of the total. The fact that the leading twenty chains in 1960 were in part made up of concerns which either were not in existence or were not in the leading twenty in 1950 makes any comparison between them virtually meaningless other than the fact that it shows the ability of smaller concerns to grow and expand. The fact that the market share of the leading three, four and five concerns has declined in recent years means that any increase in the market share of the leading twenty concerns is attributable to the growth of smaller concerns. At least seven of the concerns in the top twenty by 1960 were not even in existence as chains (i.e., having more than one store) in 1948. They are Food Giant, Fox, Hughes, Yor-Way, McCoy's Shoppers and Pix.

80. There has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased despite the disappearance of a number of the smaller, older, corner grocery stores for the following reasons:

(a) In 1952 there were ten concerns which each operated ten or more stores in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. These concerns expanded their operations in the following decade. The growth and success of these concerns did not deter others from entering the business and expanding. By 1961, 14 smaller concerns had grown to the point where they also were operating ten or more stores in the two counties. Seven of these opened their second store sometime after 1952. In addition, the number of concerns operating more than one but fewer than ten stores increased in number from 86 in 1952 to 126 in 1961. Neither the size nor subsequent growth of the market leaders in 1952 offered any deterrent to the entry and growth of smaller concerns.

(b) In 1948, Safeway was the leading chain operating in Los Angeles. Both its assets and number of stores were many times greater than any of its rivals (with the exception of A&P which had only 21 stores in Los Angeles at the time). However, other companies, the vast majority of which were local concerns, were able to compete effectively against Safeway. Although Safeway's sales increased its percentage share of the market declined.

(c) The share of the market enjoyed by the leading three, four and five concerns declined from 1952 to 1960 while the market share of smaller concerns increased.

(d) By 1958, the leading twenty concerns accounted for only slightly more than half of the total grocery store sales in Los Angeles and Orange Counties. After 1958, their market share declined.

(e) The entry and growth of new and smaller concerns, the declining share of the market of the industry's leaders, the inability of larger concerns to dominate the market to any degree despite their own success and expansion, and the ability of smaller concerns to compete effectively against larger ones indicates there is no likelihood of a tendency to monopoly.

81. There have been some prior mergers between retail grocery concerns in the area but the evidence is that these acquisitions were either market extensions by companies not previously doing business in the area (e.g., Lucky Stores, Kroger, Acme Markets, Inc., Food Fair), or were in part offset by the subsequent failure of the acquiring concern and the disposal of its stores (e.g., Fox, McDaniel's and Yor-

Way), or were largely if not entirely offset by sales by the acquiring concern of a large number of the acquired or others of its stores (e.g., Thriftimart, Mayfair). The history of the grocery business in this area is marked by the fact that the larger chains furnish the training, experience and frequently the stores for the future competitors who leave their employ to enter into the grocery business for themselves. There is no evidence that Von's or Shopping Bag had been involved in any prior merger.

82. The market share of Von's after its merger with Shopping Bag is not sufficient to warrant a finding of a reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition or of a tendency to monopoly in the relevant market. This is particularly true in the retail grocery industry in this area for the following reasons:

(a) The competitive effectiveness of any particular store in this market is not necessarily dependent on the market share controlled by the owner of the particular retail store;

(b) Market share in the retail grocery business in this area cannot necessarily be equated with market power, particularly because of the existence of the strong cooperative buying organizations, Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. and Orange Empire, which enable the single-store operators and small chains to purchase their supplies as cheaply as the larger chains;

(c) The market share involved in this case is controlled by an entirely local company;

(d) The relative ease of entry into the business, the greatly expanding population, the inability of the industry leaders to hold their market share, the ability of new entrants and smaller concerns to survive and grow and the constant changes in and the emergence of new forms of marketing of groceries and related products tend to insure continued vigorous and increased competition;

(e) Substantiality in a given case depends on a variety of factors. The factors mentioned above together with the experience of more than four years since the merger occurred, which has demonstrated that this merger has had no adverse effect on and has not lessened competition in this market, require the finding that there is not a reasonable probability that this merger may tend to substantially lessen competition in the relevant market.

83. There has been no tendency to monopoly evident in the purchase, distribution or sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. As of March 28, 1960, there was not a reasonable probability that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger would tend, and in the more than four years since the merger it has not tended, to create such a monopoly. There is no reasonable probability that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag may tend to create a monopoly in the foreseeable future.

84. Both Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger and Von's after the merger were engaged in interestate commerce in that they purchased approximately 51% of the groceries and related products ultimately offered for sale in their stores from outside California.

85. Competition in the retail sale of groceries and related products taken as a whole in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area is competition in interstate commerce.

86. In addition to the foregoing, the Court finds in all respects as set forth in the following Conclusions of Law:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Court concludes:

1. In all respects as set forth in the foregoing Findings of Fact.

2. This Court has jurisdiction over this cause by reason of Sections 7 and 15 of the Clayton Act, as amended. (15 U.S.C. §§ 18 and 25.)

3. The relevant line of commerce for purposes of determining whether or not the Von's-Shopping Bag merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, is groceries and related products taken as a whole.

4. The relevant section of the country for determining whether the Von's-Shopping Bag merger violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California.

5. There is not a reasonable probability that the effect of Von's acquisition of Shopping Bag's stock may be substantially to lessen competition in said line of commerce and in said section of the country.

6. There is not a reasonable probability that Von's acquisition on March 28, 1960 of Shopping Bag's stock may have the effect of tending to create a monopoly in said line of commerce and in said section of the country.

7. Von's acquisition of Shopping Bag's stock does not violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

8. The plaintiff's proof failed to support the allegations of its complaint.

9. Defendants are entitled to judgment that plaintiff take nothing by its action.

Dated: December 16, 1964.

/S/ CHARLES H. CARR,
United States District Judge.

MOTION OF APPELLEES TO AFFIRM

Pursuant to Rule 16, paragraph 1(c) of the Revised Rules of this Court, Appellees Von's Grocery Company and Shopping Bag Food Stores move that the judgment of the District Court be affirmed.

STATEMENT

This is a direct appeal from the final judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Central Division, dated December 16, 1964, in a civil antitrust case charging violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, (15 U.S.C.

§ 18). The District Court held, after trial, that the merger of Shopping Bag Food Stores into Von's Grocery Co. on March 28, 1960, did not violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

A more complete Statement of the case than that contained in the Jurisdictional Statement is necessary for consideration of the Question Presented.

1. History of the Action.

Three different District Judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division, have ruled adversely to the plaintiff on various phases of this action. The complaint was filed on March 25, 1960, and, after taking evidence, Judge William C. Mathes on March 28, 1960, denied the plaintiff's Motion For A Temporary Restraining Order, whereupon the merger was consummated. Plaintiff's Motion For A Preliminary Injunction to require that the former Shopping Bag be operated as if it were a separate entity from Von's was denied by Judge Mathes by order dated June 13, 1960. On March 28, 1962, Judge Albert Lee Stephens, Jr., denied the plaintiff's Motion For Summary Judgment. After trial on the merits, Judge Charles H. Carr on September 14, 1964, ordered Judgment for the defendants.

2. The Agreed Line of Commerce And Section of the Country.

The parties agreed and the District Court found that the relevant line of commerce is "groceries and related products taken as a whole," and the relevant section of the country is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which is comprised of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. (Fdgs. 14, 15.) There was no issue in the case with respect to the effect, if any, of the merger upon suppliers, and no evidence was offered on that subject. (Fdg. 16; Pretrial Conference Order Sec. VIII, Par. 6(c).)

3. The Merging Companies and the Market Structure.

On March 25, 1960, when the complaint was filed, Von's operated 28 retail grocery stores, all of which were located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. It was the successor to a family partnership which commenced doing business in 1932 with the grocery concession in a single small store. Thereafter, through internal growth, it developed into a 28-store chain, largely family owned and managed, with annual sales of $86 million in 1959. (Fdgs. 2, 3.)

Shopping Bag also had its origin in depression days, being the successor to a partnership which commenced operating in a single grocery store in 1930. It grew through internal expansion into a 38-store chain, largely family owned and managed, with sales of $84 million in 1959. Thirty-six of its stores were located in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and two were located in adjacent San Bernardino County. (Fdgs. 6-10.)

Neither Von's nor Shopping Bag had any prior merger history. After the merger in 1960, combined Von's and Shopping Bag operated less than 1.4% of all grocery stores in the area. (Fdg. 73.) Their combined market share in 1960 was 7.5% of total grocery store sales and 6.9% of the food store sales.*

Prior to the merger, Von's stores were located for the most part in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area, while Shopping Bag's stores were located in the northern and eastern portions of that area. (Tr. 1072-73; 2058, 2068-70, 2185-86; Dx. J, K, M-R, AF, BD, BE.) Thus, the operations of the two companies complemented each other with little overlap in the geographical areas each served. (Fdgs. 4, 10, 12.) In Finding 53, which focused on this specific question, the District Court found that Von's and Shopping Bag were competing for the same customers in "only four or five areas."

Appellant is in error in its effort (J.S. 7-8) to inflate the amount of overlap. For example, the reference to $43 million in sales by allegedly competing stores of the two companies (J.S. 7, 13) represents total sales by those stores, rather than the pertinent figure, namely possible sales to customers in the more limited areas from which stores of the two concerns could possibly draw the same customers. Moreover, Appellant totally ignores the

* Appellant's Statement (J.S. 5) relies upon 1958 figures (two years before the merger) showing slightly larger market shares for the merging companies and indicating that in terms of sales the combined companies would have been the largest grocery chain in the area had they been merged in that year. However, in 1960, the year of the merger, the market shares of the merging companies had declined and the merged company was second to Safeway, showing the vigor of competition and the failure of the merged entity to keep pace with the market leader. (Fdg. 74; Tr. 1958-2009.)

fact that there were stores of other concerns readily available to the population in the overlap areas (Dx. BF). It is also clear that the draw area varies from store to store and cannot be determined by mechanical tests. (Tr. 2018, 2024-25; Dx. AV.) Responsible officials of Von's and Shopping Bag concluded that the merger was feasible in part because there was so little overlap (Dx. BA), and in this view they were supported by both prior and subsequent surveys. (Kruger, Corey, Miller and Hinson affidavits, Dx. M-R, AA-AE, BB, BE.) Indeed, far more Shopping Bag stores overlapped trading areas of other Shopping Bag stores than of Von's stores. (Dx. AV.)

4. The Market Structure.

The grocery industry in the Los Angeles area is highly fragmented. There are more than 3,600 separate grocery concerns operating some 4,600 grocery stores in the area. (Fdg. 23.) In 1958, the leading 20 grocery chains in the area had only 57.4% of the business and since that time their market share has declined. (Fdgs. 78-80.)

The Von's-Shopping Bag merger did not produce any appreciable change in the structure of the market. The market share of the 12 largest firms increased only by 1.2% from 48.8 to 50%, and the market share of the top 20 increased only ½ of 1% from 56.9 to 57.4%. (Fdg. 78.)

The decade prior to the Von's Shopping Bag merger was marked by a decline in the relative positions of the leading chains and the growth of smaller concerns in the Los Angeles area. The market share of the leading grocery chain in 1960 (Safeway with 146 stores and an 8% market share) has been steadily declining since the 1930s when it had more than 1,000 stores. (Fdgs. 18, 27, 74.) The market share of the top two chains decreased from 21.1% in 1948 to 14.3% in 1958. (Fdg. 27.) The market share of the leading three, four and five concerns declined between 1952 and 1960. (Fdg. 80.) The increase in the last decade in the share of the top 8-20 chains, cited by appellant (J.S. 8-9), obviously resulted from a growth of the smaller firms, some of which are recent entries in the business. (Tr. 2034-36) For example, of the 20 top chains in 1958, seven were either not in existence at all or had only one store in 1948. (Fdgs. 27-28, 78-80.)

Following 1958, three of the top 20 went into bankruptcy and the bulk of their stores were sold to single store operators and small chains. (Tr. 1127, 1199-1202, 1246-48.) Five of the largest national grocery chains (A&P, Safeway, Kroger, Acme Markets and Food Fair) are now doing business in the area, as well as a number of strong regional chains, and a large number of viable smaller chains and single store operators. (Fdgs. 75-77.)

5. Ease of Entry.

The record shows that there are no substantial barriers to entry into the grocery business in the Los Angeles area and that excellent opportunities for growth and success are available to any qualified new entrant. In 1960, 128 grocery stores were opened by new entrants, and there were 119 openings by concerns operating at least one other store. (Fdg. 47.) Concerns operating two or more stores increased from 96 in 1958 to 150 in 1962. (Fdg. 46.) Eighteen of the 30 government industry witnesses entered the grocery business after 1948. (Fdg. 48.)

6. Cooperatives.

One of the reasons for the continued success of smaller concerns is the existence in this area of two of the largest cooperative buying organizations in the world, namely Certified Grocers of California, Ltd.* and Orange Empire Co-op. By joining one of these cooperatives, the small grocer can place merchandise on his shelves at a cost comparable to that of the large chain. These cooperatives carry a full line of groceries and related products, except for meat, produce and certain dairy items. The District Court found, with full support in the evidence, that the large chains do not have a substantial advantage in the purchase of those items not carried by cooperatives. (Fdgs. 29-38.)

---

* Small grocery retailers have always been and still are the primary source of Certified's business. Therefore, as Judge Carr said (App. A to J.S. 14a-15a), "considerable weight" should be accorded the testimony of Campbell Stewart, former President of Certified, who expressed the emphatic view that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag will not adversely affect either the competitive opportunities of small retailers or the vigor of competition in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. (Dx. BB.) In this view Mr. Stewart was fully corroborated by the testimony of Joseph Hughes, Chairman of the Board of Certified. (Dx. AZ.)

With purchasing power thus equalized, success in the grocery business in this area depends upon the experience and ability of the competitor, not size or number of stores. This is reflected in the inability of the market leaders, Safeway and Ralphs, over the years to maintain, much less increase, their market shares, and in the continued growth of the smaller concerns, including new entrants. (Fdg. 27.)

The number of grocery stores in the area has declined largely because of the development of the supermarket and more widespread use of the automobile which deprived the former small corner grocery store of its local, neighborhood monopoly. (Fdg. 24.) Nevertheless, there is scarcely a single household in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which does not have a choice of from three to ten competing grocery stores within convenient shopping distance. (Fdg. 26.) The evidence is uncontradicted that small competitors in this area flourish and that consumers are well served. (Dx. AX, AY, AZ, Tr. 2188-89, App. A. to J. S. 19a.)

7. Industry Witnesses.

Twelve single store operators, nine representatives of concerns operating from two to nine stores, nine representatives of chains having ten or more stores, five officials of Von's, and five suppliers testified* that the merger was

---

* To shorten the actual time of trial, the witnesses furnished affidavits which were introduced in evidence as their direct testimony, pursuant to agreement of the parties and with the approval of the District Court. The parties had full opportunity to cross-examine all witnesses.

not likely to and could not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Each gave specific reasons for his conclusions. Except for three Von's officials, none of these witnesses was cross-examined by the Government and their testimony stands unchallenged.

The Government furnished stereotyped affidavits of thirty industry witnesses, 26 of the 30 being proprietors of relatively small stores doing a gross annual volume of less than $1 million. Eighteen of these 30 government witnesses were cross-examined; the depositions of the other twelve were noticed, whereupon the Government stipulated that the cross-examination of the eighteen was representative of all. Although more than three years had elapsed since the merger, none of the Government witnesses could point to any lessening of competition or any real likelihood thereof, and in fact many complained of too many competing stores and too much competition. (Tr. 515-516, 599-602, 688, 1002-5, 1038-40, 1285, 1307, 1799-1803.)

8. Decision of The District Court.

In his Memorandum Opinion, Judge Carr held that it could not be concluded "that the merger in question would probably lessen competition in the Metropolitan Area either at the time of the merger or in the foreseeable future." He stated that "competition in the area appears to remain vigorous, open to anyone and especially those with experience and training, and the consumer is reaping the benefit." (App. A to J.S. 19a.)

Counsel for defendants were directed to prepare proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment. At a conference of the parties and the Court, District Judge Carr directed that changes be made in the proposed findings and said changes were made. (Tr. 2766). Later a full hearing was held to settle the findings and additional changes were made. (Tr. 2766-2845.) The Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and the Judgment were signed and filed on December 16, 1964. Thereafter appellant filed a motion under Rule 52(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for amendment of the findings and for additional findings. This motion was denied by Order signed and filed on January 8, 1965. This appeal followed.

ARGUMENT

The 1960 merger of Von's and Shopping Bag brought together two local concerns, with small market shares, in a highly fragmented, vigorously competitive market.* Neither Von's nor Shopping Bag had any prior merger history and neither operates beyond Southern California. Merged, they operate only 1.4% of the total grocery stores in the Los Angeles area and their market share is only 7.5% of total grocery store sales and 6.9% of total food store sales.

I.

The District Court found and held that competition was as "intense and vigorous" at the time of trial as it had been four years earlier at the time of the merger and that there was no reasonable probability of lessening of that vigor in the foreseeable future. (Fdg. 52, App. B, p. 40; App. A, p. 19a.) The evidence was overwhelming that this particular merger in this particular competitive setting would not tend to lesson competition, either substantially or otherwise. (Fdg. 82, App. B, pp. 50a-51a; Dxs. AX, AY, AZ, BA, BB.) Neither the "industry" witnesses called by the government nor those called by defendants could point to any diminution of competition

---

* In the Los Angeles area where there are more than 3,600 separate grocery concerns, twenty grocery chains share the same portion of the market (approximately 58%) as did the top two banks after merger in the Philadelphia National Bank case. 374 U.S. 321, 331.

following the merger, and most of them observed a contrary trend.* (See Statement, supra, 8-9)

Appellant does not challenge either the District Court's finding or the testimony of the industry witnesses regarding the continuing vigor of competition in the grocery business in the Los Angeles area. Instead, Appellant's argument comes down to a lament for a bygone era. The Jurisdictional Statement speaks nostalgically of the "old style grocery," comparing it favorably to the modern supermarket from the standpoint of potential entrants into the grocery business. Appellant points to a "continuous decline in the number of small, single store operators and an increasing trend to large scale supermarkets" (J.S. 8), and Appellant notes that "small firms" cannot compete in effective advertising with the larger operators. (J.S., p. 12, 17).

This argument, which lies at the heart of the Government's case, has two fatal flaws. First, the decline of the old style grocery store occurred long before the Von's-Shopping Bag merger and for reasons that had no reference to it (Fdgs. 17-24, App. B, p. 26a-28a). The old style grocery store is disappearing because the

* For example, there was testimony from the Government "industry" witnesses that "there is more competition now than ever" (Gertmenian, Tr. 688); that the area "has always been extremely competitive", that a "tremendous competitive situation * * * has occurred in the last few years" and competition "definitely" got tougher (Mekjian, Tr. 1038-1040); that a general price reduction in 1961 enabled the chains and single store operators to become more competitive with the discount houses (Palmer, Tr. 1147); that competition has been more vigorous since the merger, "that is a trend." (Dick, Tr. 1832-33.)

public has shown a marked preference for the supermarket. Whether run by an individual or a chain, the supermarket offers a wider range of products on a more efficient and more attractive basis. The transition from the old style grocery to the supermarket began before World War II and by the mid-1950s was very nearly complete. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, two chains of supermarkets, had nothing to do with this merchandising transition.

The second flaw in the Government's argument is that while the old style grocery store has been disappearing, the small businessman in the grocery industry has not. With the aid of cooperative buying and by exploiting the natural advantages which flow from centralized control of a small business, the grocer who operates one or a few stores can succeed and grow despite chain competition. It has happened too often, as the record shows (Fdg. 44), for there to be any question of the extraordinary opportunities open to small grocery concerns both before and since the merger here in question.

II

Judged in terms of current realities in grocery store business in the Los Angeles area, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger was without competitive significance. There are more than 3,600 separate grocery concerns operating approximately 4,600 grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Evidencing the lack of concentration, 20 chains share 58% of the sales in the area. The market shares of the leading chain and of the leading two, three, four and five chains declined in the decade prior to the merger, as smaller concerns grew and captured a larger share of available business.

Entry into the grocery business in Los Angeles is readily made by operators of ability and experience. The record is replete with evidence of many new grocery concerns which have grown and prospered in Los Angeles in recent years. In 1960 alone, 128 new concerns entered the grocery business in the Los Angeles area. Seven of the 24 concerns operating 10 or more grocery stores in 1961 opened their second store sometime after 1952. (Fdgs. 46-48).

In the Los Angeles market, Von's faces competition from stores of the five largest national chains, numerous regional chains and some 3,590 single store operators, backed up by powerful cooperative buying organizations. (Fdgs. 23, 29, 38, 75, 76, 77). The evidence plainly demonstrated that the competitive effectiveness of any store in this area does not depend upon the number of stores operated by the particular concern (Fdgs. 80, 82, Tr. 1961-2; Dx. AX, AY, AZ). Indeed, the toughest competitors usually are the single store operators (Tr. 2432-33; Dx. AX-AZ, BA, BB). In these circumstances, this merger had and will have no significant impact on competition in the retail marketing of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles area.

III

There are persuasive reasons for enabling Von's to expand. Von's was largely family-owned and it operated within a single geographical area. Its acquisition of Shopping Bag was therefore consistent with the "desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry" (See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 315-16). Absentee ownership has been avoided, and management continues to reflect the civic and social concerns of the area in which it operates. Yet Von's and other supermarket operators provide their customers with a range of products and services unknown in the days of the old style grocery, at highly competitive prices which afford only the narrowest profit margins.

Equally compelling reasons support the merger from the standpoint of Shopping Bag. The president and principal stockholder of Shopping Bag was advanced in years and, because of declining profits and thinness of management, he wished to dispose of the company on a favorable basis (Fdg. 12). Shopping Bag's percentage of net income to total sales dropped below 1% in 1959, and the company did not have a strong management team to take over from Mr. Hayden (Fdg. 12). Professor Turner has emphasized the importance of interpreting Section 7 so as not to bar mergers in such circumstances:

". . . Widespread prohibition of mergers would impose serious, if not intolerable, burdens upon owners of businesses who wished to liquidate their holdings for irreproachable personal reasons. Moreover, economic welfare is significantly served by maintaining a good market for capital assets. By enhancing the value of assets when owners wish to sell, a strong capital assets market increases the rewards of successful intrepreneurial endeavor. . . ." Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Har. L. Rev. 1313, 1317 (1965).

The fact that the acquisition of Shopping Bag enables Von's to enjoy lower operating costs (App. B, p. 24a), is not a ground for invalidating the merger. This would be "not only bad economics but bad law." Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313, 1324 (1965).* Indeed, the primary test of our economic system is whether consumers are well served, cf. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. at 367, n. 43, and this should not be obscured by attempts to measure a merger against a World War I model of competition.

* Professor Turner spelled out his reasons as follows:

"Beyond this, there seem to be overpowering reasons against using cost savings as a basis for invalidating conglomerate or other mergers. First, there is the enormous social interest in progress and efficiency, which has represented one of the primary bases for the policy of promoting competition as it has in fact evolved. Second, to forbid mergers that would or might produce substantial efficiencies would narrow substantially the category of acceptable mergers, thereby drastically weakening the market for capital assets and seriously depreciating the price that entrepreneurs could get for their businesses when they wish to liquidate. . . . Third, the protection that this policy would afford to small business, except in the short run, is at best highly conjectural and probably negligible. . . ."

IV

Although this Court has considered a number of merger cases in recent years, none of them would support, much less require, reversal of the District Court judgment in this action. The foundation case under amended Section 7, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, involved a large national chain which, through a series of acquisitions, had integrated its manufacturing operations with its retail operations to the proven disadvantage of small, nonintegrated, retail competitors. Moreover, the Court said that the tendency toward concentration in the shoe industry was being "accelerated through giant steps striding across a hundred cities at a time." 370 U.S. at 346.

Brown Shoe was amplified in United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, but neither the facts nor the language of that case stand as a barrier to the affirmance of the judgment of the court below. In Philadelphia Nat. Bank, the merger produced a bank controlling 30% of a highly concentrated market in which four concerns controlled 90% of the business. Moreover, after the merger, the two leading banks in Philadelphia would have controlled 58% of the total bank assets, deposits, and loans in the relevant market area.

In Philadelphia Nat. Bank this Court laid down the much-quoted test that "A merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in the significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen the competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anti-competitive effects." 374 U.S. at 363. Measured by that test, the Von's-Shopping Bag merger is plainly valid. A combined percentage share of 1.4% of the grocery stores and 7.5% of sales in the relevant market can hardly be regarded as "undue." Cf. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. at 364 n. 41. The increase in concentration is far from "significant": in the decade prior to the merger, the market shares of the leading chains had been decreasing, and, as a result of the merger, the market share of the 20 top chains increased only from 56.9 to 57.4% while that of the leading two concerns increased from 14.3 to 16.6%. Moreover, the evidence from a wide range of industry witnesses clearly showed that the merger is not at all likely to have anti-competitive effects.* (See Statement, pp. 8-9)

In United States v. First National Bank, 376 U.S. 665, the merged bank was larger than all of the remaining banks combined, having more than 50% of the bank assets, deposits, and loans in the market area there held to be relevant. This is the only case cited by Appellant in support of its theory that the elimination of competition between Von's and Shopping Bag is automatically invalid. (J.S. 12.) It is plainly inapposite because, unlike the Von's-Shopping Bag merger, the merger of the banks involved in that case produced a bank controlling an "undue" percentage of an already concentrated market.

* The value of industry witnesses was recognized in Brown Shoe. 370 U. S. 294, 344. While little weight was given to the testimony of industry witnesses in Philadelphia Nat. Bank because of their "failure to give concrete reasons for their conclusion," there is no such shortcoming here. (Dx. AX, AY, AZ, BA, BB.)

In United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271, this Court found that the "line of commerce showed highly concentrated markets," with the domination by a few companies producing an "oligopolistic" structure, completely unlike that present in the grocery industry in Los Angeles. 377 U.S. 278-80. In this setting, the Court found that the acquisition of Rome Cable by Alcoa, the market leader with 27.8%, was a violation of Section 7 despite the relatively small share of the acquired company in the aluminum conductor market.

In United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, the relevant product market was dominated by six firms having a total of 70.1% of the business. The merger produced a company with 25% of the market which the court found to be violative of Section 7 in an industry where, in sharp contrast to the grocery business in the Los Angeles area, there had been a "history of tendency toward concentration in the industry." 378 U.S. at 461.

The distinctions between the recent decisions of this Court and the instant case are both numerous and substantive. Here, the combined market share is much smaller; there was little overlap in the geographical areas served by each company prior to merger; the market as a whole is fragmented, not oligopolistic in structure; the trend is away from concentration; entry is classically easy; and, moreover, the competitive effectiveness of a particular retail store is not dependent upon the size of the concern which owns it.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to affirm should be granted.

Introduction and summary	15
I. A merger between direct competitors which occurs in a market still relatively unconcentrated but beginning to display the attributes and symptoms of oligopoly, and which contributes appreciably toward further concentration of that market, violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act	20
A. Congress intended that mergers be tested under strict standards designed to arrest the transformation of small-firm, relatively unconcentrated markets into markets dominated by a few large and powerful sellers	20
B. A merger between direct competitors in a market still relatively unconcentrated is presumptively illegal if (1) the market is threatened by undue concentration and (2) the challenged merger increases the market's concentration substantially	25

Argument—Continued Page

II. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is presumptively illegal, since it appreciably increased concentration in a market which was approaching oligopoly 28

A. The Los Angeles metropolitan area is a proper market for purposes of this case. 28

B. The Los Angeles grocery market, at the time of the merger, already revealed a tendency toward the characteristic structure and behavior of oligopoly ... 31

C. The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag significantly increased the concentration of sales in the relevant market in a few large firms 36

III. The presumption of illegality has not been rebutted 39

A. The condition of entry by new competitors into the market seems unlikely to offset the merger's adverse effects 39

B. In view of the concerns which actuated Congress in enacting the Antimerger Act, evidence that the market remains vigorously competitive is entitled to little weight 42

C. The merger cannot be excused on the ground that the merging firms were local rather than national in the scope of their operations 43

No. 303

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APPELLANT

v.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, CENTRAL DIVISION

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the district court (R. 3017) is reported at 233 F. Supp. 976. The court's findings of fact and conclusions of law (R. 3064) are unreported.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the district court was entered on December 17, 1964 (R. 3091), and the notice of appeal was filed by the United States on February 12, 1965. This Court noted probable jurisdiction on October 11, 1965 (R. 3105; 382 U.S. 806).

The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, 32 Stat. 823, as amended, 15 U.S.C. 29. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271.

QUESTION PRESENTED

The third and sixth largest sellers in the $2.5 billion Los Angeles retail grocery market—direct competitors—merged. The aggregate market share of the merged firms—8.9 percent—exceeded that of any other seller in the market. The market was already tending toward oligopoly, as evidenced (among other things) by the fact that the 8 largest sellers at the time of the merger had an aggregate market share of almost 39 percent; and the merger substantially raised the level of concentration. The question presented is whether such a merger violates the prohibition of Section 7 of the Clayton Act against mergers whose effect may be substantially to lessen competition.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. 18, provides in pertinent part:

> No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

STATEMENT

The United States filed its complaint in this civil antitrust action on March 25, 1960, charging that the effect of the acquisition by Von's Grocery Company ("Von's") of Shopping Bag Food Stores ("Shopping Bag") might be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the sale of groceries and related products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 18). The government's request for a temporary restraining order was denied and the merger was consummated on March 28, 1960.[1] After trial, the district court (Judge Carr) held that no violation of Section 7 had been proved, and dismissed the complaint.

1. THE MERGING COMPANIES

Von's and Shopping Bag were among the leading grocery retailers in the Los Angeles area. Both companies sold a complete line of groceries and related products in modern, self-service, cash-and-carry supermarkets;[2] both bought directly from suppliers; and

---

[1] On June 30, 1960, the court denied the government's request for a preliminary injunction, which would have required separation of the two companies' operations pending the outcome of the suit, and stated that "the stores themselves are the basic assets of the business and the stores may be divested individually or in a group."

[2] Before the merger, the average sales of individual stores of each defendant compared favorably with all other chains in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. For Von's, average sales per store exceeded $3 million, while Shopping Bag's average sales per store approximated $2.1 million (GX 13, R. 2348; Pre-Trial Order, Part III, pars. 8, 12, R. 14–15). A super-both operated their own warehouse and distribution centers and maintained fleets of trucks to service their stores (Fdgs. 3, 5, 9, 55, R. 3065–3066, 3081). Each had commenced operations in the early 1930's, had grown significantly, and was a large, profitable and expanding firm (Fdgs. 1–3, 6–9, 12(b), R. 3064–3067; GX 16, R. 2357). Each had achieved its present size through internal expansion, that is, by building and leasing its own stores rather than by merging with or acquiring other grocery enterprises.

In 1958, Von's operated 27 grocery supermarkets in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Its total sales of approximately $94,000,000 constituted 4.7 percent of all retail grocery store sales in the area and made it the third largest grocery chain there (R. 3023). Between 1948 and 1958, it had doubled the number of its stores, almost doubled its share of the market, and quadrupled its sales (Fdgs. 3, 12(b), 25, R. 3065–3066, 3071).

In 1958, Shopping Bag operated 36 supermarkets, with total sales of approximately $90,531,000. Thirty-four of the stores, with sales of approximately $84,-164,000, were located in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, which gave Shopping Bag approximately 4.2 percent of the total retail grocery store sales and a rank of sixth in the area (R. 3023, 3066). In 1948, Shopping Bag had had only 15 stores in the area, and between 1948 and 1958 had increased its sales sevenfold and had more than tripled its share of the market. (Fdgs. 9, 12(b), 25, R. 3066, 3067, 3071).

2. THE CHANGING STRUCTURE OF THE RETAIL GROCERY INDUSTRY IN THE LOS ANGELES METROPOLITAN AREA

The parties agreed and the district court found that the area's twenty leading supermarket chains were all part of a network of retail grocery-store competition in which the major grocery chains, as well as other grocers, "frequently responded to competitive practices originated by one of the other major chains" (Pre-trial Order, Part III, Par. 46, R. 19; Fdgs. 39, 41, R. 3076–3077; GX 84,[3] R. 1995–1997).[4] The district court found that both Von's and Shopping Bag were "substantial competitive factors" in this market (Fdg. 42, R. 3077). In terms of dollar sales, industry position, market shares, number of stores operated, expansion activity, impact upon prices, and consumer acceptance, they were plainly among the market's leaders (Pre-trial Order, Part III, Pars. 6–52, R. 14–20; GX 4–5, 9–23, 27, 29–32, R. 2329–2330, 2333–2378, 2385, 2401–2408).

Moreover, Von's and Shopping Bag were both among the relatively few grocery chains able to engage in area-wide advertising, particularly in the metropolitan newspapers with broad circulation (GX

[3] This exhibit was inadvertently omitted in the printing of the record. It is reproduced as Appendix B hereto, p 47, infra.

[4] Examples of the way in which competitive practices spread through the area "like a communicable disease" (R. 1995) were the widespread adoption of trading stamps (R. 1344) and the responsiveness of the area's chains to Von's effort to eliminate loss leaders and reduce shelf prices generally on several hundred grocery items (R. 1234–1235, 1343–1344, 2018).

17–19, R. 2358–2366).[5] In addition, the major chains, including Von's and Shopping Bag, carefully checked and attempted to match each other's prices (GX 23–26, R. 2377–2383).[6] Indeed, these two firms were among the seven (the others were Ralph's, Safeway, Alpha Beta, Market Basket and Thriftimart—all among the ten largest grocery chains in the area) which were included in the Competitive Survey book, now known as the Key Survey book, a weekly publication sold to all major chains and many independents in Southern California that contained the shelf prices charged for some 3,000 grocery items (GX 21, 22, R. 2369, 2374; R. 903–904). This pricing survey was uti-

[5] In 1959, Von's net cost for advertising was $738,906 and Shopping Bag's gross advertising expenditures (without allowances for coopertaive advertising) were $1,187,627 (GX 17, 19, R. 2358, 2364).

[6] Von's maintained and kept copies of the weekly advertising of the major chains in its files and regularly selected the Shopping Bag advertisements for this purpose (GX 24, (unprinted)). Similarly, Shopping Bag closely followed the prices of other chains when it set its own prices (GX 25, R. 2379). William R. Hayden, former president of Shopping Bag, testified on this subject as follows (GX 23, R. 2377):

> Q. It is your judgment that prior to the merger your prices were the same as Safeway and Ralphs and Von's and Market Basket, Thriftimart?
> A. That's right.
> Q. As Food Giant, as Alpha Beta?
> A. I would say that all prices—we check one another to see what the other man is doing, and we know that we can't demand any more from the customer than the other fellow on a nationally known item. There may be items in our store that we wouldn't be to the penny the same price, whether it be a mistake in the pricing or a mistake that the store would fail to catch when they made their price changes.

lized by chain and independent grocery retailers in setting prices for their grocery items (GX 72, e.g., R. 40, par. 2, R. 76, par. 3).

Not all of Von's and Shopping Bag's individual stores were in the same immediate vicinity, although the parties agreed and the district court found that where the stores of each company were so "located that both could compete for some of the same customers" "the competition was intensive" (Fdg. 41, R. 3077; Pre-trial Order, Part III, Par. 46, R. 19). In discussing the "draw" area for customers, the district court, relying heavily on information provided by Dr. Ward Jenssen, a government witness, noted that the average customer was willing to drive at least 10 minutes, or about 4 miles, and to pass by other stores, in order to reach a particular store (Fdg. 39, R. 3076).[7]

Dr. Jenssen's testimony indicated that on the basis of ten minutes' driving time, almost half the stores

[7]. W. D. Hayden, a director of Von's who had been in the grocery business since 1932, testified that Von's-Shopping Bag stores can draw five miles and that customers will pass other stores to get to the store of their choice (R. 1356–1357). While appellees' witness Bouque assumed a theoretical draw area of 1½–2 miles when making a study of competition between Von's and Shopping Bag prior to the merger (R. 1732–1733), he clearly demonstrated the importance of the outer 2 miles of an over-all 4 mile draw area by testimony which indicated that between 10 and 40 percent of all customers of Von's and Shopping Bag came from outside a 2-mile radius of any Von's or Shopping Bag store (DX BF, R. 1825). Von's president also noted that loss of a major part of these customers would be a serious problem, and that Von's would be forced to take measures to regain this trade, e.g., by advertising special promotions (R. 1298–1303).

of the two concerns, with aggregate sales of approximately $76 million, were in a position to compete directly for the business of more than one million of the same customers, who bought a total of nearly $500 million in grocery products per year (R. 2023–2024; GX 13, R. 2348; GX 85[8]). On the basis of defendants' figures, more than 20 percent of their stores were so located as to be likely to draw customers from overlapping areas (DX AV, EX E, R. 2914; R. 1277–1283, DX BF, R. 1755, 1758, 1799). In 1960, the sales of these stores exceeded $48 million—approximately 25 percent of defendants' combined total sales (GX 13, R. 2348).

The Los Angeles metropolitan area, which was stipulated to consist of Los Angeles and Orange Counties, California, is the second largest metropolitan area in the United States in population, income, and retail sales.[9] At the time of the merger, approximately 6,750,000 persons resided in the area and total retail sales of groceries were in the neighborhood of $2.5 billion annually (Fdg. 15, R. 3068). In 1960, some 4,000 separate retail grocery concerns operated

[8] GX 85, inadvertently omitted in the printing of the record, is printed as Appendix C hereto, p. 48, infra.

[9] In 1960, there were only seven States in the United States with larger populations than the Los Angeles metropolitan area (GX 2, R. 2328); and the area's population was larger than the combined populations of the eleven smallest States in the United States and the District of Columbia (GX 3, R. 2329). The area's total retail sales were approximately $9.1 billion in 1957, representing 42 percent of all California retail sales, 33 percent of total Pacific Coast retail sales, and 25 percent of such sales in the eleven western States (Pre-trial Order, Part III, Par. 23, R. 16).

approximately 4,800 stores in the area (Fdg. 73, R. 3084). However, the 12 largest enjoyed 50 percent of the total sales (GX 8, R. 2332 (1958 figures)).

This concentration seems, in part at least, to reflect a long-term decline in the number of small, single-store operators and an increasing trend to large supermarkets operated by local and national chains. The district court found that between 1950 and 1963, the number of single-store grocery operators in the Los Angeles area decreased by 1,775, from 5,365 to 3,590, and the number of stores operated by chains of two or more stores increased by 102, from 856 to 958 (Fdg. 23, R. 3070; GX 33–35, R. 2409–2412; R. 914). This decline was accompanied by a marked increase in the percentage of total retail grocery sales controlled by large chains.[10] In 1948, the leading 20 chains accounted for 43.8 percent of all such sales; in 1958, for 56.9 percent (R. 3023). Department of Commerce statistics show that the market shares accounted for by the eight largest chains in the area increased from 33.7 percent in 1948 to 40.9 percent in 1958; for the 12 largest chains, from 38.8 percent in 1948 to 48.8 percent in 1958; and for the 16 largest chains, from 41.6 percent in 1948 to 53.4 percent in 1958 (GX 6, 7, 87, R. 2330–2331, 902).

This trend seems likely to continue. The district court found that of the 247 new grocery stores opened in the area in 1960, 119 were opened by concerns operating at least one other store (Fdgs. 47, 59, R. 3079, 3082; GX 36, R. 2412)—67 of them by the leading 20 chains (Fdg. 59, R. 3082). In addition, the leading chains account for a predominant share of the business generated by new openings. The 20 leading chains enjoyed 67.8 percent of the total sales of all grocery stores opened in 1960 (GX 43, R. 2417), and 25 of the 29 new stores that year which had sales of more than $2 million were opened by such chains (GX 37, R. 2413). Most store closings are by single-store operators and the smaller chains (GX 36, 38–42, R. 2412, 2414–2417).

[10] The district court's erroneous finding that concentration was decreasing is considered infra, p. 34, n. 33.

The market's rising level of concentration since 1948 has been accompanied by a pattern of purchases of established stores by the area's major chains. The National Association of Retail Grocers so recognized in a study of the merger movement in retail food distribution which it published in 1959. "The three Pacific states of California, Oregon and Washington rank second among the geographic divisions [of the United States] in terms of sales volume of food stores absorbed by mergers. Los Angeles was the prime center of such acquisitions."[11]

A table prepared by Dr. Willard F. Mueller, Chief Economist of the Federal Trade Commission, from figures obtained by the Commission as part of its [11] This study, entitled The Merger Movement in Retail Food Distribution 1955–1958 (A Four-year Study of the Trend Toward Centralized Power in America's Major Distributive Industry), is printed in Hearings Before a Subcommittee of the Sen. Select Committee on Small Business, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., Appendix II, pp. 61, 64 (1959).

study of food marketing shows that between 1949 and 1958 nine of the leading 20 chains in the Los Angeles metropolitan area acquired 126 grocery stores from concerns outside the top 20 chains (GX 44, R. 2418; R. 906).[12]

[12] The Commission's study was confined to chains with 11 or more stores in 1958. The record establishes, however, that members of the leading 20 chains with fewer than 11 stores also made acquisitions during this period (R. 908–909). Moreover, information developed from the work papers of a principal defense witness, Godfrey Lebhar, clearly demonstrates the substantiality of merger activity among the area's leading chains during the 1953 through 1961 period (GX 78, R. 2503). His papers record the following acquisitions and mergers, among others, and show that 5 of the leading 10 chains in the Los Angeles area as of 1958 (Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, Mayfair, and Von's—see GX 4, R. 2329) made acquisitions of stores between 1957 and 1961:

Year	Acquiring firm	Acquired firm	Number of stores acquired
1957	Piper Mart	Bi-Right & Big Bear	3
1958	Mayfair	Bob's Supermarket	7
1961	Better Foods	Border's Markets	3
1954	Kory's Markets	Carty Brothers	8
1958	Food Giant	Clark Markets	15
1956	Fox	Desert Fair	4
1959	Lucky	Hiram's	6
1958	Fox	Iowa Pork Shops	11
1957	Lucky	Jim Dandy Mkts	9
1961	Food Giant (and others)	McDaniel's Markets	10
1957	Food Giant	Panorama Markets	3
1958	Pix	Patton's Mkts	4
1958	Alpha Beta	Raisin Markets	13
1960	Piggly Wiggly	Rankins Markets	4
1959	Pix	S & K Markets	2
1960	Von's	Shopping Bag	37
1959	Pix	Shop Right Markets	3
1958	Yor-Way	C. S. Smith	5
1957	Food Giant	Tolnea Marts	2
1957	Mayfair	U-Tell-Em Markets	10
	Total		169

In 1958, 99 of the acquired stores were still operated by the acquiring chains and had sales of $192.9 million, an amount equivalent to nearly 75 percent of the increase in market shares of the 20 leading chains between 1949 and 1958 (GX 6, 44, 45, R. 2330, 2418, 2420; R. 906–907). During the same period, these chains disposed of a substantial number of unwanted outlets; and without the acquired stores the market share of the chains in 1958 would likely have dropped from 56.9 percent to 47.3 percent (R. 907). "It is therefore apparent," Dr. Mueller concluded, "that a good part, if not all, of the increasing concentration in the twenty largest grocery chains resulted from acquisitions" (ibid.).

3. THE MERGER

Discussions of a possible merger between Von's and Shopping Bag were initiated by Von's president in late 1957 or early 1958 (GX 46, R. 2421), after Von's had unsuccessfully explored merger possibilities with officials of Kroger (DXAF, R. 2747; R. 1264) and with Alexander Markets (R. 1264). By 1959, Shopping Bag, and its president and principal stockholder, W. R. Hayden, became concerned that Shopping Bag's earnings and profits were declining (Fdg. 12(b), R. 3066), although the three preceding years had been profitable, and 1957—the year the merger discussions began—had been the most profitable in the firm's history (R. 1293).[13] The merger

[13] In addition, the district court found that Mr. Hayden wanted to become less active in Shopping Bag's affairs, but was worried because its existing management was not strong (Fdg. 12(c), R. 3067); that since both Von's and Shopping between Von's and Shopping Bag was consummated on March 28, 1960, with Von's emerging as the surviving corporation;[14] since that time, the combined firm has operated as a single entity in the relevant market (Pre-trial Order, Part III, Pars, 4, 6, 10, 11, 41, R. 13–14, 18; GX 9–11, 21–23, 27, 47–71, R. 2333–2345, 2369–2378, 2385, 2423–2497; GX 72, e.g., R. 42, par. 11; Fdg. 50, R. 3080). After the merger, Von's had total assets of approximately $42,000,000 and, on the basis of 1958 figures,[15] ranked first in the Los Angeles retail grocery market with approximately 8.9 percent of total sales.[16] The district court found that

---

Bag were largely family owned, the death of any family member might result in estate-tax problems and possibly the forced sale of stock (Fdg. 12(e), R. 3068); and that the merger would result in greater efficiencies and some lower operating costs (Fdg. 12(d), R. 3067).

4. THE DISTRICT COURT'S OPINION

The district court first held, in accordance with the stipulation of the parties, that the merging firms had been engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the merger; that the relevant line of commerce (product market) was the retail sale of groceries and related products[18] and the relevant section of the country (geographical market) was the Los Angeles metropolitan area (consisting of Los Angeles and Orange Counties); and hence that the sole issue for decision was whether, in this market, the merger had the adverse effects on competition specified in Section 7 (R. 3020–3021). On this point, the court found that the market was characterized by frequent and easy entry of new competitors and was vigorously competitive, and that the smaller sellers were able to hold their own in competition with the major chains (R. 3024–3025, 3031). The court then indicated that these factors in its view outweighed any possible adverse effect on the structure of the market produced by the merger. Concluding that there was no probability that the merger would lessen competition in the relevant mar-

ARGUMENT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The retail sale of groceries and related products customarily offered for sale in grocery stores and supermarkets constitutes the nation's largest industry by a substantial margin.[19] It is so large that its local markets in many instances dwarf whole industries. Los Angeles, the setting for the merger here in issue, is a case in point. Retail sales of grocery products there (the nation's second largest metropolitan area) amount to some $2.5 billion annually. Von's and Shopping Bag, the parties to the merger, had combined sales of almost $180 million per year.

The grocery industry is also a traditional bastion of the small businessman. There are more single-unit businesses in this industry,[20] most of them quite small, than in any other American industry. To be sure, the number of grocery stores has declined in recent years with the growth of the supermarket method of food retailing; and grocery chains, like Von's and Shopping

Bag, have grown. Nevertheless, while the food industry today contains more corporate giants, and fewer corner groceries and other small firms, than it once did, it remains an industry where large firms are not yet dominant and the opportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial. Furthermore, from all indications, its technology is such that, even today, and for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive.

This general pattern is instanced by Los Angeles. At the time of the merger, there were 4000 separate grocery businesses in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and they operated a total of 4800 separate stores. No firm had more than an 8 percent share of the area's total grocery business (DXAM, R. 2787), and it appears that small chains, and even some single-store enterprises, were able to operate efficiently and to hold their own in competition with the larger chains. Nevertheless, a large share of the business was held by a relatively few large firms, and such concentration appeared to be on the rise. Thus, for example, the 8 largest firms in 1958 accounted for almost 39 percent of the area's total grocery sales, and the 3 largest for 19 percent.[21]

In the present case, the government challenged under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Antimerger Act, the merger in 1960 of the third (Von's) and sixth largest (Shopping Bag) retail sellers of grocery products in Los Angeles; these were large and profitable firms which before the merger had combined sales of almost $180 million per year and a combined market share of almost 9 percent [22]—more than any other seller. The importance of whether such a merger is permissible under Section 7 need not be labored. The question involves the nation's largest industry, and substantial firms in one of that industry's largest local markets—a market itself far larger in monetary terms than many industries. Moreover, the legislative history of the Antimerger Act discloses particular concern with the competitive dangers of merger activity in sectors of the economy which are traditionally areas of individual enterprise and small-business opportunity, and Congress specifically referred to the retail grocery industry as one of those areas.[23]

[22] Von's had 4.7 percent; Shopping Bag 4.2 percent. Statement, supra, p. 13, n. 16.

[23] As the House Report states, "recent merger activity has been of outstanding importance in several of the traditionally 'small business' industries. More acquisitions and mergers have taken place in textiles and apparel and food and kindred products—predominantly 'small business' fields—than in any other industries." H. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3. It seems clear that the Report was referring, among other things, to mergers among grocery retailers. See Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Merger Movement—A Summary Report (1948), pp. 52–53. Congress drew heavily in its consideration of the merger problem on this FTC report. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315.

We believe that the district court erred in holding this merger not barred by Section 7. We do not quarrel with most of the court's subsidiary findings, but we think it applied an incorrect legal standard in that it failed to accord sufficient weight to Congress' paramount concern with arresting tendencies toward concentration. If the district court applied the wrong standard, this Court is free to ignore the district court's ultimate judgment on the legality of the merger.

We divide our argument into two parts. In the first, we propose as the proper standard for judging this merger a test of presumptive illegality, drawn from the general standards and basic purposes of Section 7 and applicable generally to mergers such as that at bar between direct competitors in markets where economic power is still relatively dispersed. Since Congress' foremost concern was to prevent the rise of oligopolies, wherein a few sellers control the bulk of a market's business, we urge that such a merger should be deemed presumptively illegal when it (1) occurs in a market where there is a significant tendency in the direction of undue concentration and (2) appreciably increases the existing level of concentration.

In proposing such a test, we follow the path broken by this Court in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321. Because of factual differences between the cases, we do not suggest that the standards fashioned in Philadelphia Bank are appropriate here. But we think that the Court's general approach of basing decision upon a few criteria consonant with the statute remains valid in the present context, and that the test we propose is justifiable on that basis.

Applying this test to the particular facts here, we first show that at the time of the merger the Los Angeles grocery market was already loosely oligopolistic in structure, had a history of increasing concentration, and apparently was at (albeit not yet across) the threshold of oligopoly pricing. Hence, undue concentration was clearly foreseeable if substantial mergers between competitors in the market were permitted to take place. We next show that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, in combining the third and sixth largest sellers in that market, with an aggregate market share of almost 9 percent (more than any other single firm), increased concentration appreciably. A leading competitive factor in the market (Shopping Bag, the acquired firm), with a 4.2 percent market share, was eliminated by the merger, and this significantly reduced the number of major competitors and increased the market share and potential power of those that remained. Since the merger thus moved the market significantly in the direction of undue concentration, we conclude that it is presumptively illegal. In the last part of our argument, we show that the presumption of illegality established by the foregoing facts has not been rebutted.

I

A MERGER BETWEEN DIRECT COMPETITORS WHICH OCCURS IN A MARKET STILL RELATIVELY UNCONCENTRATED BUT BEGINNING TO DISPLAY THE ATTRIBUTES AND SYMPTOMS OF OLIGOPOLY, AND WHICH CONTRIBUTES APPRECIABLY TOWARD FURTHER CONCENTRATION OF THAT MARKET, VIOLATES SECTION 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Before the facts about a merger can be intelligently sifted and weighed to determine whether it violates Section 7, it is necessary to have a more precise legal test or standard against which to measure the facts than the bare words of the statute supply. Heeding this Court's direction that "in any case in which it is possible, without doing violence to the congressional objective embodied in § 7, to simplify the test of illegality, the courts ought to do so in the interest of sound and practical judicial administration" (United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362), we shall first attempt to derive, from the general policies and objectives of Section 7, some workable legal criteria to guide decision of the specific issues of this case. We postpone to the next part of the argument the task of applying these criteria to the present facts.

A. CONGRESS INTENDED THAT MERGERS BE TESTED UNDER STRICT STANDARDS DESIGNED TO ARREST THE TRANSFORMATION OF SMALL-FIRM, RELATIVELY UNCONCENTRATED MARKETS INTO MARKETS DOMINATED BY A FEW LARGE AND POWERFUL SELLERS

The basic thrust of Section 7 is prophylactic. In enacting a law to control mergers, Congress was not seeking to curb abuses of monopoly power or to punish restraints upon the freedom of competitors. At least, that was not its central concern. As the legislative history of the Antimerger Act makes clear,[24] and as this Court has repeatedly observed,[25] Congress' paramount concern was with preventing the emergence of a certain kind of market structure or environment—the condition economists call oligopoly, characterized by the concentration of market power in the hands of a few companies. Congress believed, and rightly so, that concentrated or oligopolistic market environments promoted competitive abuses and restraints.

The theory of competition that Congress adopted as the premise of this legislation posits that " '[c]ompetition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share' " (United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363). Where the major sellers in a market are few, a price cut by one is likely to have so drastic and immediate an adverse effect upon

[24] See S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 5:

> Where several large enterprises are extending their power by successive small acquisitions, the cumulative effect of their purchases may be to convert an industry from one of intense competition among many enterprises to one in which three or four large concerns produce the entire supply. This latter pattern (which economists call oligopoly) is likely to be characterized by avoidance of price competition and by respect on the part of each concern for the vested interests of its rival * * *.

The pertinent legislative history is summarized in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315–318.

[25] See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280; United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363.

the sales of the others as to compel them to respond promptly with matching cuts, thereby wiping out any competitive advantage won by the initiator of the reduction. Realizing this, competitors in an oligopolistic market have little incentive to cut prices. Oligopoly thus promotes price rigidity and discourages vigorous price competition,[26] and in so doing tends to direct rivalry into other channels—such as heavy advertising and promotions—the social benefits of which are less obvious, to say the least, and which tend to create formidable barriers to entry by new competitors.

As the means of arresting the transformation of markets having many sellers of roughly equal size to a state of domination by a few large firms, Congress chose to limit growth through mergers, since mergers had frequently been instrumental in the creation of oligopoly. It was recognized, however, that the process of transformation through mergers from a dispersed to a concentrated market was often gradual, that no single merger was apt to be decisive, and that there was no sharp line below which a market was atomistic and above which it was oligopolistic—and hence that unless the merger law was so drafted as to enable remedial action against a series of mergers, even though each might seem relatively harmless, viewed in isolation, it would be very largely a dead letter. Congress accordingly determined to impose a far stricter standard for judging mergers than that applied in Sherman Act cases. Under Section 7, no showing is required that a challenged merger in fact harms competition; it is enough if the merger "may" have the effect of substantially lessening competition.

Section 7 thus can and should be brought into play before concentration in an industry has reached a high level, so as "to brake this force at its outset and before it gather[s] momentum." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 318. It follows that the most pertinent question in a merger case is not, what is the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but, rather, what is the likely future direction of the market's development if the merger is permitted? For, in light of Congress' basic concerns, it is the relationship of the challenged merger to the long-term evolution of the market, not the particular effects of the merger considered by itself, that is critical.

Predicting the long-term future effects of a merger is very difficult, however, because of the many variables involved. It calls more for an economic prophecy than for a conventional legal judgment. Consequently, it has become widely accepted that the merger law cannot be effectively enforced on a completely ad hoc case-by-case basis. Workable administration of the law requires that its general standards be translated into sound criteria, as specific as the nature of the problem permits, keyed to the basic statutory goal of preventing undue concentration—criteria that can be administered by a court and understood and applied by businessmen in planning their affairs, and so impart needed predictability and certainty to the law."

We believe it is quite feasible to formulate an appropriate and reasonably simple legal test to govern mergers between direct competitors in markets that have not yet become, but appear to be on the way to becoming, excessively concentrated. With respect to those mergers, too, we think Congress' "intense * * * concern with the trend toward concentration warrants dispensing * * * with elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior, or probable anticompetitive effects," and that a merger found wanting under the criteria of the test is "so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363.

B. A MERGER BETWEEN DIRECT COMPETITORS IN A MARKET STILL RELATIVELY UNCONCENTRATED IS PRESUMPTIVELY ILLEGAL IF (1) THE MARKET IS THREATENED BY UNDUE CONCENTRATION AND (2) THE CHALLENGED MERGER INCREASES THE MARKET'S CONCENTRATION SUBSTANTIALLY

1. Since the basic concern of Congress was with forestalling the emergence of concentrated markets, the first element of our test is a determination whether the market in which the merger takes place is threatened with increasing concentration. If there is no evidence of oligopolistic tendencies, the danger posed by a merger that does not itself radically transform the market's structure may be slight; but if the market is already tending toward oligopoly, any further merger-induced increase in concentration requires very careful scrutiny. Various factors are relevant in determining whether a threat of oligopoly exists. One in particular is whether, at the time the merger takes place, concentration in the market is already near the level of oligopoly. The significance of this factor should be apparent. An increase in concentration in a market where the 10 largest sellers have only 10 or 20 percent of the market's total sales clearly presents a less imminent danger of the emergence of behavior characteristic of oligopoly than in a market where the 10 largest have a 40 or 50 percent share. In the latter case, further increases in concentration may well produce a significant impairment of the vigor of price competition. As this example suggests, the adverse effect of a merger which increases concentration is more serious when there is already some concentration than when the market is still highly fragmented.

2. The second element of our proposed test is whether the challenged merger significantly raises the existing level of concentration. This has two related aspects. First, did the merger, by eliminating the acquired firm as an independent competitive factor in the market, appreciably increase the aggregate market share of the leading firms? Second, was the acquired firm an important competitive factor? The elimination of such a competitor might be far more serious than the elimination of a number of smaller competitors which, in the aggregate, had the same market share but which were too small to contribute significantly to maintaining competitive conditions in the market. Cf. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280–281.

If the merger thus reduces the number of significant competitors in the market and enhances the market position of those that remain, it means that the merger has substantially changed the structure of the market, bringing it palpably nearer to the condition of oligopoly that Congress wanted to avoid. When such a merger occurs in a market already showing signs of oligopoly (the first part of our test), the merger should be forbidden, absent a strong showing to the contrary, because its long-range threat to competition is great.

The two-part test of presumptive illegality we propose, while modeled on, is obviously not identical to, that of United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363. The circumstances there were different. The market was one in which concentration had already reached very high proportions,[28] and the particular test formulated by the Court—prohibiting a merger where the resulting firm had 30 percent of the business of the relevant market—was designed to deal with mergers occurring in such an environment, already tightly oligopolistic. The Court carefully avoided suggesting that its test was exclusive or that ~~competition~~ concentration of less than 30 percent were necessarily legal (see 374 U.S. at 364–365, n. 41). Where, as in the present case, a different problem is posed—the application of Section 7 in markets not yet highly concentrated but which reflect a definite trend in that direction—another, and stricter, standard is obviously necessary. Otherwise, the purpose of the statute—to prevent markets from reaching such excessive levels of concentration—would be defeated.

It is no answer to say that a merger need not be forbidden unless it actually creates oligopoly. For there is no magic point at which oligopoly springs full-blown into existence. Between the highly fragmented and the tightly concentrated market structure there is a middle area, one broad part of which is certainly a danger zone. No one can say—at least not without an inquiry far broader and deeper than practical law enforcement permits—at precisely what point a particular market will exhibit oligopolistic behavior.[29] It is thus meaningless to speak of allowing firms to merge up to the lower limit of oligopoly; practically speaking, that limit is unascertainable. Hence, once a market has entered the broad danger zone, a merger that substantially increases concentration is too dangerous to be permitted. Any more lax standard, we submit, would be ineffective to prevent the gradual transformation of atomistic into oligopolistic markets and industries.

[28] The two largest firms prior to the merger had a combined market share of 44 percent.

II

THE MERGER OF VON'S AND SHOPPING BAG IS PRESUMPTIVELY ILLEGAL, SINCE IT APPRECIABLY INCREASED CONCENTRATION IN A MARKET WHICH WAS APPROACHING OLIGOPOLY

A. THE LOS ANGELES METROPOLITAN AREA IS A PROPER MARKET FOR PURPOSES OF THIS CASE

Appellees concede that Los Angeles is "the area of effective competition" within which to appraise the effects of the challenged merger, yet argue—inconsistently, we think—that Los Angeles is not a single market for the retail sale of grocery products in an economic sense. Pointing out that grocery stores and supermarkets draw their customers, not from the entire Los Angeles metropolitan area, but from a much smaller neighborhood area, they contend that figures showing a grocery chain's total sales throughout the entire metropolitan area may distort the chain's actual competitive standing. The contention is without merit. The Los Angeles metropolitan area may meaningfully be regarded as a single market, the principal members of which are in competition with each other, and hence their area-wide sales totals (which we use in assessing the effects of the challenged merger) furnish a reliable index of market structure.

[29] This is because the critical factor in precipitating oligopolistic behavior is psychological: sellers' assessments of the probable responses of their competitors to any price or other competitive move on their part. Machlup, The Economics of Sellers' Competition (1952), p. 351.

While it is true that a given grocery store or supermarket is unlikely to seek customers throughout the entire Los Angeles area, and in that sense is not a direct competitor of all other grocery outlets there, the principal grocery companies in the area are chains consisting of many separate stores; and some, at least, of their component stores compete directly with component stores of competing chains. Von's, for example, had 27 widely scattered supermarkets and Shopping Bag had 34, and although not all of Von's and Shopping Bag's many branches were in such proximity to each other as to compete directly for consumer patronage, clearly a great many were (see Appendix B, infra, p. 47). Appellees' own figures showed that more than 20 percent of the stores operated by the two firms were so located that they were likely to draw customers from overlapping areas; the true figure is nearer 50 percent. (Statement, supra, pp. 7, 8, and n. 7.)

The existence of such substantial overlaps suffices to make the Los Angeles grocery chains in fact direct competitors of each other—and not merely partially or intermittently so. For the chains set prices and advertise them on an area-wide, not a store-by-store, basis (GX 23, 25, 26, R. 2377, 2379, 2382; GX 24 (unprinted)). Suppose that chains A and B, each of which had 10 stores, both sold cereal for 40 cents, and three of B's stores were located in close proximity to A stores but its remaining stores were not; and suppose that A decided to lower its price to 38 cents. Unless B responded, three of its stores would be adversely affected. Since, the record here indicates, B would probably not make a selective price cut limited to the directly affected stores,[30] it would be forced to lower its price for all of its stores including those not directly in competition with any A store. In this fashion, the effects of the direct competition between some branches of the chains would be felt equally throughout the entire chains, just as if there were direct competition between every branch. Thus the major chains must be regarded as competing throughout Los Angeles with one another, albeit not all of their component stores draw upon the same pool of customers. So the chains themselves think. They follow each other's prices meticulously[31]—hardly necessary if they were not direct and substantial competitors.

207-201—66——5

---

[30] Since the chains advertise on an area-wide basis, it would be impractical for them to set prices on a store-by-store basis. Having advertised a single price, they could hardly charge different customers different prices depending on which branch they shop at. There is also some indication that non-uniform prices within the chain might create legal problems under local law (R. 1995–1996); it might even raise questions, in some instances, under the Robinson-Patman Act. At all events, the record is clear that each chain charges uniform prices throughout the area.

[31] Statement, supra, p. 6 and n. 6; and p. 35, infra.

B. THE LOS ANGELES GROCERY MARKET, AT THE TIME OF THE MERGER, ALREADY REVEALED A TENDENCY TOWARD THE CHARACTERISTIC STRUCTURE AND BEHAVIOR OF OLIGOPOLY

Before considering the degree to which the relevant market in this case showed signs of oligopoly immediately before the challenged merger, we think it relevant to point out that it is by no means inevitable, absent mergers such as the one challenged here, that this market should come to be dominated by a few firms. First, the market is plainly large enough, in absolute economic terms, to attract and hold many firms—with total annual sales of $2.5 billion, it overshadows many entire industries. Second, the retail grocery business in Los Angeles, as elsewhere in the country, has in fact attracted and maintained a very large number of independent firms. Third, it does not appear that the economies of large-scale operation, or any other considerations of efficiency, dictate that the Los Angeles retail food market be divided among a few large chains. Doubtless there are marginal grocery operators whom the "supermarket revolution" has made technologically and competitively obsolete. But there is no showing in this record that a well managed single-unit grocery—assuming that the single unit is a modern supermarket and belongs to a cooperative—cannot compete effectively with the chains. And certainly the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag—which united two chains already very large—was not necessary on any theory that either firm was incapable, standing alone, of continuing to be a strong and effective competitor. Each was a large and profitable firm, having upwards of 25 modern supermarkets, total sales of more than $80 million a year, and complete warehouse and distribution facilities and trucking fleets (Statement, supra, pp. 3–4).

The foregoing circumstances would lead one to expect a market characterized by the dispersion, not concentration, of economic power. Instead—and, as we shall note, largely as the result of earlier mergers—the market already seems well on the road to oligopoly.

1. At the time of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag in 1960, a small number of large chains accounted for a relatively large share of the market. The 10 largest (less than $\frac{3}{10}$ of one percent of the total) had an aggregate share of 43.6 percent of all retail sales of grocery products in the area (R. 3023, Statement, supra, p. 13, n. 16), which left the remaining 56.4 percent to be divided among almost 4,000 smaller firms. These 10 firms thus did in the neighborhood of a billion dollars' worth of grocery business in this one metropolitan area. The eight largest sellers accounted for some 39 percent of the market's total sales, the four largest for 23.5 percent, and the three largest for 19.1 percent.

Bearing in mind the vast size of this market and its traditional small-firm character, the amount of concentration immediately prior to the merger was substantial. To be sure, concentration had not reached the same height as it has in many American industries and markets. It had not reached a level at which price rigidity or other characteristic competitive ills of oligopolistic markets were evident. But the combined market share of the leading sellers was at a level that economists would consider characteristic of at least a loose oligopoly. See Bain, Industrial Organization (1959), pp. 32–33, 131–132. That is to say—as we explain shortly (pp. 34–36, infra)—sales were already sufficiently concentrated in a few firms that they identified each other as major competitors whose actions and responses must be carefully considered in planning price and other competitive moves.

2. Moreover, concentration, mirroring national trends in the retail food industry,[32] was on the rise. According to Bureau of the Census figures, the aggregate market share of the eight largest sellers in the Los Angeles retail grocery market rose from 33.7 percent in 1948 to 40.9 percent ten years later, and the share of the 12 largest rose in this period from 38.8 to 48.8 percent (GX 7, R. 2331). Mergers were largely responsible for these increases (Statement, supra, pp. 10–12)."

[32] According to the January 1960 staff report to the Federal Trade Commission entitled Economic Inquiry into Food Marketing, Part I—Concentration and Integration in Retailing, p. 5, between 1948 and 1958 domestic food chains with 11 or more stores at the end of 1958 increased their share of total grocery store sales from 34.5 percent to close to 43 percent, an increase of 24.6 percent. See, also, Mueller and Garoian, Changes in the Market Structure of Grocery Retailing (1961), pp. 48–67, 115–131. And in many local markets, concentration has reached very high levels. Figures offered by appellees show that in Detroit, 5 grocery chains have 52 percent of the sales; in Kansas City, 5 have 57 percent; in Atlanta, 5 have almost 70 percent; in Pittsburgh, 3 have about 50 percent; in Washington, D.C., 4 have 75 percent; in Philadelphia, 4 have more than 65 percent (DX BB, R. 1658, 1949).

3. The pricing policies of the major grocery chains in Los Angeles indicate that the market was approaching oligopoly conditions. When a few firms account for a large proportion of the sales of a market, each is likely to make his pricing decisions with conscious reference to the pricing policies of the [35] In Finding No. 80 the court below stated that "[t]here has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased" (R. 3087). This is a conclusory finding without adequate record support and rests largely on (1) the asserted ease of entry into the market—a factor distinct from concentration (see pp. 39–40, infra), and (2) a defense exhibit (DX AN, R. 2788) purporting to show that the aggregate market shares of the top three, four, and five firms declined slightly between 1952 and 1960. This evidence is completely inconclusive. (a) The 1960 figures in this computation were based on a projection of experience during the first six months and the figures for the other years are also based on rough estimates. The government's statistics showing an increase in concentration between 1948 and 1958 were supplied by the Bureau of the Census; their accuracy is not questioned. Even using defendants' figures, one finds that there was an increase in the aggregate market shares of the leading three, four, and five firms if one uses almost any base year except 1952, which appears to be unrepresentative. Finally, to the extent there was any decrease between 1952 and 1960, it was apparently due to the steep decline of Safeway, which between 1948 and 1958 saw its market share fall from 14.2 to 8 percent and this was due to a nonrecurring factor: Safeway's decision to sell off or close its many small stores and convert to modern supermarket operations. In 1931, Safeway had had 1,000 stores in the Los Angeles area (Fdg. 18, R. 3069); in 1960, it had only 146 (Fdg. 74, R. 3084). Finding No. 80, incidentally, was drafted by the defendants; the district court's opinion nowhere mentions a decline in concentration.

others, and to be reluctant to initiate price reductions. "[P]arallel policies of mutual advantage, not competition, * * * emerge." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280.[34]

By the time of the challenged merger, the leading grocery chains in the Los Angeles market had reached a significant stage on the way to consciously interdependent pricing. The record indicates that the major chains (including Von's and Shopping Bag) were accustomed to study carefully the prices charged by competing major chains, and that each strove to maintain the same prices as the others; they evidently believed that they could not afford to be undersold by any member of their ranks. This is not to say that concentration had reached the stage where vigorous price competition was seriously impaired. But it had reached the stage—which precedes and foreshadows oligopolistic pricing—where a few sellers, by reason of their size in the market, have emerged as the market's major competitors, have identified each other as the rivals to be watched,[35] and have decided that their own competitive fortunes are to some degree interdependent with those of these rivals. This merger is a substantial step toward the point where these majors—their market shares being such [34] See, e.g., Chamberlin, The Theory of Monopolistic Competition (7th ed., 1956), pp. 48–49; Fellner, Competition Among the Few (1949), pp. 177–183; and pp. 21–22, supra.

[35] The record clearly shows that the major chains in the Los Angeles retail grocery market recognize each other as their principal competitors (GX 23, 25, R. 2377, 2379; GX 24 (unprinted); GX 26, R. 2382; GX 84 (Appendix B, infra, p. 47); DX AV, R. 2881–2883, 2885 ff.).

that a price cut by one would have so drastic an impact on the business of the others as to compel an immediate matching response by all, wiping out the price cutter's advantage—decide that the game of vigorous price competition is not worth the candle.

C. THE MERGER OF VON'S AND SHOPPING BAG SIGNIFICANTLY INCREASED THE CONCENTRATION OF SALES IN THE RELEVANT MARKET IN A FEW LARGE FIRMS

In a large market, which is capable of supporting many firms none relatively very large, but in which sales have already become significantly concentrated in a few large firms, the importance of strictly scrutinizing any merger that increases concentration still further is manifest. In such a market—the kind we have here—a few substantial mergers are all that would be needed to complete the transformation of the market structure into a tight oligopoly. We believe that the challenged merger was such a substantial merger and should be barred in order to prevent further deterioration in the market's structure.

The merger eliminated a major competitor which at the time of the merger was the sixth largest retailer of grocery products in the market. A prosperous chain of modern supermarkets, enjoying 4.2 percent of the total sales of this vast market, Shopping Bag was clearly one of the market's leaders. Its elimination significantly reduced the already small number of firms which enjoyed substantial market shares. The fewer such firms, the likelier it is that the market will show the lessened competition characteristic of oligopoly. The merger also substantially increased the aggregate market shares of the leading sellers. The aggregate share of the two largest (which after the merger were Von's and Safeway) rose from 14.4 to 16.9 percent. The aggregate share of the three largest firms rose from 19.1 to 23.3 percent. That of the four largest rose from 23.5 to 27.7 percent, and that of the eight largest from 38.8 to 41.6 percent.[36] (See Statement, supra, p. 13, n. 16; see, also, GX 4, R. 2329.)

Since the concern of the law is with long-term trends to concentration, it is also appropriate to compare the level of concentration as it was in the fairly recent past with the level reached after the merger. By this measure, the concentration of the Los Angeles retail grocery market's sales in the eight largest firms rose from 33.7 percent in 1948 to 41.6 percent (1958 figures) after the merger.[37] It has been suggested

[36] In using the sum of the pre-existing market shares of the merging companies in these calculations, we follow Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 343, n. 70. To be sure, the district court here found that at the time of the merger (1960), the merging firms' market shares were less than they had been in 1958 (the year used by the government in its computations). We have already explained why appellees' 1960 figures are less reliable. See n. 33, supra, p. 34.

[37] It is true that if the top four, rather than eight, firms were chosen, the increase would be substantially smaller. But there is every reason to be concerned with a market moving steadily toward domination by eight firms even if concentration among the top four is increasing less rapidly; a market completely dominated by only eight sellers would be very likely to display the behavioral characteristics of oligopoly. At the other end, if the top 12 or 20 chains were chosen for purposes of comparison between 1948 and post-merger concentration levels, the that such a rise is alone enough to condemn a merger. Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 313, 316 (1960). At all events, it is apparent that the concentration of business in the hands of the major chains was appreciably higher after than it had been before the merger.

The precise impact of this increase in concentration upon the competitive health of the market cannot, of course, be gauged. It may indeed be small. But this much is clear: The merger moved a market already approaching oligopoly a pronounced step further in that direction. And it is obvious that only a few more steps of comparable magnitude would be necessary to make the concentration of the market so great that competition would be clearly weakened. The government is not required to await such further changes. This is the appropriate point for remedial action against a "cumulative process" of concentration. H. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 342-344, 346; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 464. In the setting of a market already increase would be much greater than for the top eight. But there is less reason to be concerned with eventual domination of a market by a relatively large number of sellers; oligopoly requires that the controlling sellers be few. Eight is a frequently used, if admittedly somewhat arbitrary, dividing line. Bok, supra, this page, p. 313, n. 262. Of course, there is all the more reason to be concerned with the threat of oligopoly when, as in this market, the effect of the merger is to increase substantially the already significant aggregate share of fewer than eight firms—the top two, three, or four, for example.

tending toward oligopoly and having a history of merger-induced concentration, this merger has significantly increased the danger that competition will be substantially injured. That is all the statute requires.

III

THE PRESUMPTION OF ILLEGALITY HAS NOT BEEN REBUTTED

We consider in this part whether appellees have shown any persuasive reason why, in the face of the facts marshaled in the preceding part, this merger should not be held illegal. They plainly have not.

A. THE CONDITION OF ENTRY BY NEW COMPETITORS INTO THE MARKET SEEMS UNLIKELY TO OFFSET THE MERGER'S ADVERSE EFFECTS

Appellees assert that there is complete ease of entry into the Los Angeles retail food market. Even if this were true—and we show next that it is not—it has not been shown that the condition of entry is such as to cancel or cure the undesirable effect of the challenged merger upon the structure of a market already moving in the direction of oligopoly.[38]

Ease of entry could presumably affect competitive conditions in a market in one of two ways. First, the threat of new competition might act as a restraining influence upon the prices charged by existing sellers. But even so, there would certainly be a range within which existing sellers could charge relatively high prices without fear of attracting additional sellers into the market. Cf. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 425 (C.A. 2). Hence, easy entry alone cannot be relied upon to prevent oligopolists from exploiting their market power.

---

[38] See Ekco Products Co., Trade Reg. Rep. (1963–1965 Transfer Binder), ¶ 16879, p. 21901 (FTC), affirmed, 347 F. 2d 745 (C.A. 7); Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 260 (1960). Cf. Bain, Barriers to New Competition (1956), p. 189; Bain, Industrial Organization (1959), p. 425.

The second possibility is that ease of entry might result in so substantial an influx of new competitors as to lower concentration appreciably. But, again, there is no evidence that this is in fact likely here. Entry was no less easy between 1948 and 1958, and indeed many new grocery companies did appear during that period, but concentration did not decrease; it increased.

At all events, the asserted ease of entry is overstated. Entry and expansion by small operators is in fact sharply limited, due to the preference of shopping-center owners for established large chains. The court below expressly found that shopping centers—increasingly important as supermarket sites—prefer "a large grocery chain with a well-advertised name" and a secure financial position; "smaller concerns therefore have difficulty in obtaining shopping center locations" (Fdg. 54, R. 3081). Thus, most of the new permits for larger stores are secured by the 20 leading chains, which in 1960 opened 25 of the 29 new stores that had sales of more than $2 million each (GX 37, R. 2413), and which accounted for 67.8 percent of the total sales of all new grocery stores opened that year (GX 43, R. 2417). And the capital requirements for opening a new supermarket—about $700,000 exclusive of the cost of land (R. 1286–1288)—are by no means negligible.

Moreover, to the extent that the large size of existing competitors inevitably acts as a psychological deterrent to the entry or expansion of smaller firms, it is clear that the growing concentration of the Los Angeles retail grocery market—significantly advanced by the challenged merger—will make new entry increasingly unattractive. If entry is relatively easy today, it is unlikely to remain as much so if mergers such as this one between substantial competitors are permitted. Cf. Procter & Gamble Co., Trade Reg. Rep. (Transfer Binder 1963–1965), ¶ 16673, pp. 21578–21579 (FTC). Hence, it is illusory to seek to justify this merger on grounds of ease of entry. The merger certainly will not increase the ease of entry, and it may have the opposite effect.[39]

[39] Nor is the development of food merchandising through discount houses likely to have a limiting effect on concentration in the market. The district court found that this method of distribution has become "increasingly popular," "is expanding rapidly and may well indicate a substantial additional competitive force" in the Los Angeles area (R. 3027; Fdg. 61, R. 3082). The record does not show, however, how much business the food departments of discount houses actually did There were only 37 of these in existence at the time of trial (R. 1385), and five more were opened after the trial (Stipulation after Trial, R. 2326), making a total of only 42 out of 4,800 stores. Moreover, this new form of grocery retailing may well aggravate rather than reduce concentration. For at least 15 (and probably 19, in view of Food Fair's acquisition of Fox Market) of the 42 were operated by chains that were among the ten largest in 1958 (GX 4, R. 2329)—a much larger share than these leading chains had of total stores in the area.

B. IN VIEW OF THE CONCERNS WHICH ACTUATED CONGRESS IN ENACTING THE ANTIMERGER ACT, EVIDENCE THAT THE MARKET REMAINS VIGOROUSLY COMPETITIVE IS ENTITLED TO LITTLE WEIGHT

Admittedly, there is evidence that the retail grocery market in Los Angeles remains competitive despite Von's acquisition of Shopping Bag. In giving great weight to that evidence,[40] however, we think the district court clearly misconceived the thrust of Section 7. Congress was not primarily concerned with preventing mergers that resulted in actual and immediate competitive injury; such mergers were forbidden by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Its concern, rather, centered on mergers which, while occurring in markets still competitive, and while not perceptibly reducing competition, contributed materially to a movement toward oligopoly—a movement which eventually would produce substantial adverse effects on the health and vigor of competition. We do not contend that such effects are already manifest in the Los Angeles market, or that the challenged merger created a full-blown oligopoly. But we have shown that the merger seriously aggravated a tendency toward oligopoly, and hence that its long-term effects may be seriously adverse. The prophylactic function of the Antimerger Act would be crippled if such a merger could be justified by proving that it produced no immediately discernible impairment of competition.

[40] The district court relied especially heavily on evidence that in the few years between the consummation of the merger and the trial the merger appeared to have had no adverse effects on competition (Fdgs. 52, 66, 82(e), 83, R. 3080, 3083, 3088–3089). Such reliance was contrary to this Court's observation that, while post-acquisition evidence in a merger case is relevant, it is not controlling, since "the force of § 7 is still in probabilities, not in what later transpired" (Federal Trade Commission v. Consolidated Foods Corp., 380 U.S. 592, 598).

C. THE MERGER CANNOT BE EXCUSED ON THE GROUND THAT THE MERGING FIRMS WERE LOCAL RATHER THAN NATIONAL IN THE SCOPE OF THEIR OPERATIONS

Appellees stress that Von's and Shopping Bag were local, not national, grocery chains. This is true in the sense that their operations were limited to the Los Angeles metropolitan area; it does not mean they were small firms. The Los Angeles area constitutes a vast market for the retail sale of grocery products. Von's and Shopping Bag, both market leaders, had aggregate sales in the year of the merger of almost $180 million. They were much larger than the vast majority of their competitors. And they were profitable and growing. The merger of such firms, resulting, as we have seen, in a substantial increase in concentration in a $2.5 billion market already tending toward oligopoly, cannot be excused on the ground that these firms—like the merging banks in Philadelphia Bank—were local.

We grant that the grocery industry contains a number of larger and geographically more diversified firms than Von's and Shopping Bag—although we note that the merger made Von's the nation's sixteenth largest grocery chain.[41] We also grant that some of the national chains have engaged in recent years in extensive merger activity, including acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. The merger activity of the major national chains has, in fact, been challenged in several formal proceedings, and is the subject of several current investigations, under Section 7.[42] But an enforcement program which completely ignored mergers by powerful local chains would be fatally incomplete. It is the local areas, like Los Angeles, that are the effective areas of competition in the grocery industry. If they are permitted to become oligopolistic, the congressional mandate in this industry will be thwarted.

We need scarcely add that a decision by this Court holding illegal the Von's-Shopping Bag merger will not mean that small firms in the retail grocery industry cannot merge, the better to compete with large firms. There is not the slightest indication that this merger—the largest that ever took place in this market—was necessary to enable Von's or Shopping Bag to compete effectively with anyone. And viewed in their market setting, they were plainly large, not small, firms. Furthermore, the market was already tending toward undue concentration; the legality of mergers in completely fragmented markets is not here in issue.

[42] See Kroger Co., F.T.C. Docket 7464 (complaint issued April 1, 1959); National Tea Co., F.T.C. Docket 7453 (complaint issued March 26, 1959; hearing examiner's decision, April 5, 1963; pending on appeal to Commission); Grand Union Co., F.T.C. Docket 8458 (complaint issued January 12, 1962; hearing examiner's decision October 4, 1963; consent order of divestiture issued by Commission, June 10, 1965). In Kroger, Commission counsel have moved to amend the complaint to add a challenge to Kroger's acquisition of the Market Basket chain in Los Angeles. The acquisition of Alpha Beta by Acme Stores, Inc. is currently being investigated by the Department of Justice.

This case presents the sole issue whether, in a market that is already a loose oligopoly, the merger of two of the market's leaders, which between them control almost 10 percent of the business of the market, is "an appropriate place at which to call a halt" to a further rise in concentration (Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 346). We submit that it clearly is, and that appellees have not shown that sanctioning this merger, in the face of its adverse effect upon the competitive structure of the relevant market, would nevertheless be consistent with the policies that underlie the statute.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court should be reversed, and the case remanded with directions that the court enter an appropriate remedial degree.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY and SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES,

Appellees.

BRIEF OF APPELLEE VON'S GROCERY COMPANY

THE QUESTION PRESENTED

The Los Angeles retail grocery business, as appellant recognizes, is "vigorously competitive", with "vigorous price competition" being waged by approximately 4000 separate firms operating over 4800 stores in the vast Los Angeles area (App. Br. 42, 35). There are some 3700 single-store operators and most of these, as well as other concerns, obtain their groceries from huge retailer-owned cooperative buying organizations. Both parties are agreed that "opportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial" and the probability is that "for the indefinite future many relatively small firms should be able to thrive" (App. Br. 16). In the ten years prior to the 1960 merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, the market share of each of the two leading concerns (Safeway and Ralphs Grocery Co.) declined. Post-acquisition evidence indicates (and appellant concedes) that the merger has not had an adverse effect on competition; indeed competition appears to have intensified since 1960. The question presented is whether in these circumstances this merger, which brought together two local concerns with a combined market share of less than 8 per cent, should be invalidated solely on the basis of a rigid and novel test of illegality.

STATEMENT

This is a direct appeal from the final judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Central Division, dated December 16, 1964, in a civil antitrust case charging that the merger of Shopping Bag Food Stores into Von's Grocery Co. would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18). The District Court held, after trial, that the merger, which occurred on March 28, 1960, did not violate said Section 7.

Three different District Judges on four different occasions have ruled adversely to Appellant on various phases of this action. The complaint was filed on March 25, 1960, and, after taking evidence, Judge William C. Mathes on March 28, 1960 denied the Motion For A Temporary Restraining Order, whereupon the merger was consummated. The Motion For A Preliminary Injunction to require that the former Shopping Bag be operated as if it were a separate entity from Von's was denied by Judge Mathes by order dated June 13, 1960. On March 28, 1962, Judge Albert Lee Stephens, Jr. denied Appellant's Motion For Summary Judgment. After trial on the merits, Judge Charles H. Carr on September 14, 1964 wrote a Memorandum Opinion (R. 3017-3031) and ordered Judgment for Appellees.

At the time of the merger on March 28, 1960 Von's operated 28 retail grocery stores, all in the Los Angeles Metropolitan area (Los Angeles and Orange Counties) with annual sales of $86 million in 1959. It was the successor to a family partnership which commenced doing business in the depression days of 1932 with a grocery concession in a small store. Its development thereafter was through internal growth and it was at all times largely family owned and managed. (Fdgs. 2, 3, R. 3064.)

Shopping Bag was the successor to a partnership which commenced operations in a single small grocery store in 1930. At the time of the merger it had grown through internal expansion to a 38-store chain (36 in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area) with annual sales of $84 million. It was likewise largely family owned and managed. The company lacked depth of qualified management, a problem which was intensified with its growth. (Fdgs. 7-13, R. 3065-3068.)

After the merger in 1960, combined Von's and Shopping Bag operated only 1.4% of some 4800 grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and their combined market share in 1960 was 7.5% of total grocery store sales and 6.9% of food store sales in the area.* After the merger Von's ranked second to Safeway. (R. 1739, Fdgs. 73-74, R. 3084-3085)

By agreement of the parties any issue as to the relevant line of commerce and the relevant section of the country was eliminated. The parties agreed and the District Court found that the relevant line of commerce is "groceries and related products taken as a whole", and the relevant section of the country is the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which is comprised of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. (Fdgs. 14, 15, R. 3068-3069.) There was no issue in the case as to the effect, if any, of the merger upon suppliers, and no evidence was offered on that subject. (Fdg. 16, R. 3069, and R. 22.)

After trial, the District Court judge filed his Memorandum Opinion in which he stated it could not be concluded "that the merger in question would probably lessen competition in the Metropolitan Area either at the time of the merger or in the forseeable future." He added that "competition in the area appears to remain vigorous, open to anyone and especially those with experience and training, and the consumer is reaping the benefit." (R. 3031).

* This is based on 1960 figures, the year of the merger, and was a somewhat smaller market share than the total for the two companies in 1958. (Compare Dx. AM, R. 2787-2788 and R. 1739) Appellant variously states that after the merger Von's market share was 8.9% (Br. 13), "almost 9%" (Br. 17, 19) and "almost 10%." (Br. 45) However, they repeatedly refer to area sales of $2.5 billion and Von's Shopping Bag sales of "almost $180,000,000" (Br. 15, 43) and this, if correct, would make the market share 7.2%.

In accordance with Rule 7 of the Local Rules, counsel for defendants were directed to prepare revised proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment.* At a conference of the parties and the Court, District Judge Carr directed that changes be made in the proposed findings and said changes were made (R. 2250-2251). Thereafter at a hearing to settle the findings, additional changes were ordered. (R. 2246-2297). The Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and the Judgment were signed and filed on December 16, 1964. Appellant subsequently filed a motion under Rule 52(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for amendment of the findings and for additional findings. (R. 3092-3097). That motion was denied by Order signed and filed on January 8, 1965. (R. 3098). This appeal followed.

ARGUMENT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

I.

Appellant's entire brief rests upon the erroneous premise that the Los Angeles grocery market is a "loose oligopoly" in structure and performance. Far from being oligopolistic, the Los Angeles market is one of the most unconcentrated and fragmented markets in America. Appellant concedes that at present the grocery business in this area is highly competitive, marked by vigorous price competition, and that smaller concerns can compete effectively with the leading concerns. (Br. 31, 35, 42) The evidence in this case and the history of the grocery business in this area lead inevitably to the conclusion that the market not only is but will remain fragmented and highly competitive.

In the vast Los Angeles area, there are some 4000 separate firms operating over 4800 grocery stores. The market leaders, Safeway and Ralphs, despite their own growth and success, have lost ground to smaller concerns in terms of market share. Thus, in 1948 Safeway and Ralphs had aggregate sales of approximately $193.5 million, 21.1% of the market. In 1958, they had increased their sales to $288 million but their market share declined to 14.3%. (Fdg. 27, R. 3072.)

In 1953, there were 96 concerns operating two or more stores. By 1962, there were 150 such concerns operating a total of 1,085 stores. In 1953 there were only 10 concerns operating 10 or more stores. By 1962, there were 24 such concerns, 7 of which experienced all of their growth in the prior decade. (Fdg. 27, R. 3072).

Thus, the trend has clearly not been toward oligopoly. Rather, there has been a diffusion of economic power and a decrease in concentration, as a number of smaller concerns have grown to challenge the market leaders. With the top 20 concerns having an aggregate market share of only 56%, the Los Angeles market is "atomistic" in structure and is not a "loose oligopoly" under the test proposed by Professor Turner before he became an advocate. Kaysen and Turner, Antitrust Policy (1959), 72.

While Appellant professes (Br. 34-36) to foresee a danger of "interdependent" or oligopolistic pricing patterns, there is no real likelihood of this occurring now or in the future. In the unlikely event that the leading concerns should at some time in the future become so foolish or so complacent as not to engage in vigorous price competition, they would very soon cease being leading concerns. The history of grocery retailing in Los Angeles has been and still is characterized by the growth of very aggressive, very ambitious smaller competitors desirous of increasing their sales and able to compete effectively with the larger chains. Thus, if the leading chains were to conclude that the "game of price competition is not worth the candle", the aggressive smaller concerns and discount houses selling groceries would be presented with an opportunity which they would surely grasp.

II

In a market as fragmented and competitive as Los Angeles, the loss through merger of a single competitor with a market share of less than 5% is not likely to lessen competition, substantially or otherwise. After Shopping Bag's merger with Von's, there still remained in the market a very large number of substantial competitive factors, and in fact the market became even more competitive following the merger. The Shopping Bag stores remained in existence and became more effective competitive units. (R. 507, 681-682, 1249-1251.) The Government's industry witnesses testified that competition remains vigorous (R. 66, 115-116, 189, 249, 335, 340, 613-614); a number testified it was constantly increasing in vigor (R. 66, 115-116, 449, 638, 713, 729, 759-761, 765-766, 777); "this is a trend" (R. 249, 1140); "there is more competition now than ever" (R. 449 and see R. 521, 660, 661).

Competitive vitality in the grocery business, at least in the Los Angeles area, cannot be computed on a slide rule. Among the important forces of the market place are individual initiative, imagination, experience, vigor, ingenuity, geography and many other forces that cannot be measured arithmetically. The existence of two huge cooperative buying organizations, Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. and Orange Empire Co-op, equalizes buying power (Fdgs. 29-36, R. 3074-3076), and this, coupled with the limited draw area of any particular retail store, compel the conclusion that market power cannot be measured simply in terms of the size or market share of the concern which operates it. Aggressive and experienced operators of single stores and smaller chains have such advantages as the opportunity to provide personal service, greater flexibility in making merchandising changes, and the ability to supervise personally all aspects of their business. As Appellant recognizes, "opportunities of individual enterpreneurs are substantial" and the probability is that "for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive." (Br. 16).

III.

Appellant seeks in this case to establish a black-letter rule of presumptive (actually per se)* illegality for any merger, regardless of the market in which it occurs. Appellant's novel rule would apply to all lines of commerce and all sections of the country — to laundries, to department stores, to furniture stores and dress shops; to New York and Los Angeles as well as Stockton, California and Logan, Utah. To adopt such a test — and thus rule out examination into economic realities with respect to a merger of two concerns having a small market share in an unconcentrated and expanding market which is characterized by ease of entry, vigorous competition, and ability of smaller concerns to compete effectively and to thrive and grow — would not be consistent with congressional intent or prior decisions of this Court. Cases such as this one can properly be decided only in the light of all relevant factors and in the context of an industry setting which is necessarily unique in every case. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 322 n. 38.

* Appellant states (Br. 18) that its "proper standard" makes the merger "presumptively illegal" but it means per se (Br. 39-45). If ease of entry, substantial opportunities for individual entrepreneurs, and admittedly continuing vigorous price competition cannot rebut the "presumptively illegal" test, then what, one may inquire, could possibly suffice?

Appellant seeks to justify its novel per se test of illegality by suggesting (Br. 23) that there is no sure way of predicting whether a merger is likely to have anti-competitive effects. However, the test which appellant proposes is so sweeping that it would necessarily invalidate even inoffensive mergers, thereby requiring the forfeiture of the advantages which would flow from them. We urge that these advantages should not be forfeited in the absence of a showing of reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition. In an unconcentrated market characterized by ease of entry, the ability of the small entrepreneur to start a business, to grow by internal expansion, and then sell on an advantageous basis (as here) will be a spur to other new entrants. A flat prohibition of such opportunities can stifle initiative and discourage the entry of new concerns.

It is extremely important that Section 7 be interpreted so as not to bar all mergers—the inoffensive or desirable along with those which are likely to be anticompetitive in effect:

> " . . . Widespread prohibition of mergers would impose serious, if not intolerable, burdens upon owners of businesses who wished to liquidate their holdings for irreproachable personal reasons. Moreover, economic welfare is significantly served by maintaining a good market for capital assets. By enhancing the value of assets when owners wish to sell, a strong capital assets market increases the rewards of successful entrepreneurial endeavor. . . . "*

ARGUMENT

I. THE LOS ANGELES GROCERY MARKET IS UNCONCENTRATED AND HIGHLY COMPETITIVE; IT IS NEITHER OLIGOPOLISTIC NOR TENDING IN THAT DIRECTION.

We shall show in a subsequent section (infra, p. 50 et seq.) that the new test proposed by Appellant is both unwarranted by the statute and unrealistic. We commence the argument, however, by discussing the basic misconception of appellant's brief, namely, that the Los Angeles grocery market is so threatened by oligopoly that the loss of a single competitor creates a reasonable probability of substantially lessening competition.

A. Far from being oligopolistic in structure, the Los Angeles grocery market is one of the most fragmented and competitive in the nation.

1. The market is atomistic; it is not loosely oligopolistic in structure.

In its brief, appellant repeatedly asserts that this market is already "loosely oligopolistic" (pp. 19, 45); that "the combined market share of the leading sellers was at a level economists would consider characteristic of at least a loose oligopoly" (Br. 33). The market facts rebut this claim and establish instead that the market is unconcentrated to a degree matched in very few other industries in America. Even appellant's figures show that at most the leading ten concerns had an aggregate market share of 43.6% (Br. 13) and the leading twenty concerns a market share of only 56.9% (Br. 9).

Assistant Attorney General Turner, before he became an advocate, regarded such a market as "atomistic" as opposed to being a "loose oligopoly." In Kaysen and Turner, *Antitrust Policy (1959) market structures are divided into four categories: "atomistic structure" (the least concentrated), "loose oligopoly," "tight oligopoly" and "partial monopoly" (the most concentrated). A "loose oligopoly" is defined therein at page 72 as: "a small number (less than twenty) of firms supplying 75 percent of the market, with no one supplying more than 10 - 15 percent and a fringe of smaller firms supplying the rest." In the case at bar, a small number of firms does not supply anything approaching 75%. Even the entire top 20 supplies only 56%. Thus, by Mr. Turner's own definition, the grocery business in Los Angeles is not a "loose oligopoly." It is far less concentrated than that. It is atomistic.

2. Appellant concedes that the market is highly competitive and unconcentrated.

Appellant concedes, as it must, that > "the food industry . . . remains an industry where large firms are not yet dominant and the opportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial.

---

* The preface to this work noted, p. xix, that "the study is in an important sense, the product of the discussion of a group of lawyers and economists extending over several years. Members of the group were Morris Adelman, Joe Bain, Robert Bishop, Robert Bowie, Kingman Brewster, David Covers, Kermit Gordon, Lincoln Gordon, Carl Kaysen, John Lintner, Edward Mason (Chairman), Albert Sacks, Donald Trautman, Donald Turner."

> Furthermore, from all indications, its technology is such that, even today, and for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive." (Br. 16.)

Appellant further recognizes that: "This general pattern is instanced by Los Angeles. At the time of the merger there were 4000 separate grocery businesses in the Los Angeles metropolitan area operating a total of 4800 separate stores. No firm had more than an 8 percent share of the area's total grocery business (Dx. AM, R. 2787), and it appears that small chains, and even some single-store enterprises, were able to operate efficiently and to hold their own in competition with the larger chains." (Br. 16, and see Br. 31.)

Appellant further concedes that concentration is not yet "undue" (Br. 19) and that "vigorous price competition" is not "seriously impaired". (Br. 35.) Appellant asserts, however, that "evidence that the market remains vigorously competitive is entitled to little weight" (Br. 42) despite the fact that it does "not contend" that substantial adverse effects on the health and vigor of competition "are already manifest in the Los Angeles market . . . " (Br. 42.)

Lacking evidence other than a dubious and theoretical test to indicate any anticompetitive effects, appellant is nevertheless critical of the district court for relying "heavily on evidence that in the few [more than three] years between the consummation of the merger and the trial the merger appeared to have had no adverse effects on competition (Fdgs. 52, 66, 88(e), 83, R. 3080, 3083, 3088-3089)." (Br. 42, fn. 40.) In short, despite its concessions, appellant nevertheless urges that this Court totally ignore findings of fact based on the evidence and give controlling effect to conjecture rather than to the realities of the market place.

3. The shares of the market leaders have been declining.

The decade prior to the Von's-Shopping Bag merger was marked by the decline in the relative positions of the leading chains and the growth of smaller concerns in this area. The market share of the leading grocery chain in 1960 (Safeway with 146 stores and an 8% market share) has steadily declined since the 1930's when it had more than 1000 stores in the area. (Fdgs. 18, 27, 74, R. 3069, 3072, 3084-3085.)*

The market share of the top two chains decreased from 21.1% in 1948 to 14.3% in 1958. (Fdg. 27, R. 3072). The market share of the leading three, four and five concerns declined between 1952 and 1960 (Fdg. 80, R. 3087-3088). Following 1960 one of the top 8 and two more of the top 20 concerns went into bankruptcy and a number of their stores were sold to single-store

* Appellant asserts (Br. 34, fn. 33) that this decline in Safeway's market share "was due to a non-recurring factor: Safeway's decision to sell off or close its many small stores and convert to modern supermarket operations." Why this should cause a decline in Safeway's market share appellant does not explain. The fact is that Safeway's market share declined because of the entry and growth of new concerns and there is no basis whatsoever for concluding that this is a "non-recurring factor."

The market share of each of the third, fourth and fifth increased in this period but not enough to make up for the decline of the two leaders. (Dx. AN, R. 2788.) Appellant criticizes the accuracy of our figures, despite the fact that they were based operators and small chains (R. 1649-1650). This, presumably at least, further reduced the aggregate market share of the leading concerns.

Seven of the top twenty chains in 1960 were either not in existence at all or had only one store in 1948. (Fdg. 27-28, 79, 3086-3087.)* In 1953 there were 96 concerns operating two or more stores; by 1962 there were 150 such concerns operating a total of 1085 stores. In 1953 there were only 56 concerns operating two or three stores, whereas in 1963 there were 104 such concerns, an increase of 86% in the number of these smaller concerns. (Fdg. 27, R. 3072.) Thus, the grocery business in Los Angeles is not dominated by large concerns. Rather the market leaders have lost ground to smaller concerns, some of them new entrants. If an industry were "dominated" by a few large concerns, one would not expect that many small concerns would continue to survive and grow.

4. The market is characterized by ease of entry.

Entrance into the business of food retailing is unusually easy to effect; perhaps more than any other industry, on actual sales data obtained by the F.B.I. directly from the records of the companies involved and supplied to defendants by counsel for the Government pursuant to court order. Appellant relies (Br. 34, fn. 33) on Census figures which cannot be verified because the concerns to which they relate are not identified.

* These shifts in the relative positions of firms within an industry are a good indication of the workability of competition. See e.g., Joskow, Structural Indicia: Rank-Shift Analysis As A Supplement To Concentration Ratios, The Antitrust Bulletin, Vol. VI, p. 9.

the grocery business is characterized by low entry barriers.* The record fully demonstrates that entry into the Los Angeles grocery market is relatively easy, thus insuring that the market will remain competitive. There is uncontradicted evidence that many successful firms have started recently with small investments (Fdgs. 28, 44-49, R. 3072-3074, 3077-3080). A new entrant:

> "starts off by renting a market that has been vacated by a chain store, usually. The fixtures are available to him, either because they have been left in the market, or he can buy used fixtures. Certified [Grocers of California, Ltd., the retailer-owned cooperative wholesaler] has a lenient plan to help the fellow put in his initial inventory, and if he is smart and works his supplier capital until he gets a foothold, he can actually get into the food business with a relatively modest investment. . . ." (R. 1314).

Indeed, the testimony indicated that the grocery department in a fairly good, small store "could be opened for not over $5000 and much of that could be suppliers' money." (R. 1315.)

Eighteen of the thirty industry witnesses called by the Government and ten of those called by the defendants opened their first store subsequent to 1948. (Fdg.

48, R. 3079.) Government witness Eaton in 1953 at the age of 24 and with total assets of $1000 obtained the lease on a small (2500 square foot) store in La Puente. His total sales in the first year were $72,000 and they increased each year to 1961 when they leveled off at around $450,000. Prior to 1963 he had purchased real property on which he planned to construct a new and larger grocery store. (Fdg. 44(e), R. 3078-3079; R. 268-271.) Government witness Palmer in 1946 at the age of 25 and with assets of $16,000 purchased a one-half interest in a grocery store in Hollywood. He subsequently sold this interest and thereafter purchased and sold other grocery stores. In 1963 he was the president and sole stockholder of a chain of four grocery stores with annual gross sales of more than $6 million. (Fdg. 44(f), R. 3079; R. 672-679, 688-689.)

Defense witness Gelson and his brother with total assets of $5000 in 1946 purchased a small, 700 square foot market in North Hollywood. They now own two large supermarkets, one of which has annual sales of approximately $6 million and the other continues to prosper despite the fact that there are 12 supermarkets near enough to be in competition with it. (R. 1434-1438.) Defense witnesses Albert Goldstein and Joseph Goodnight each left executive employment with leading chains after Von's and Shopping Bag had merged, and each is now operating a successful business. (R. 1407-1411, 1448-1451 and see R. 1141-1142.) Other examples of the opportunities for entry, growth and success are set forth in the findings. (Fdg. 28, R. 3072-3074; Fdg. 44, R. 3077-3079.)

Appellant nevertheless asserts (Br. 40-41) that "Entry and expansion by small operators is in fact sharply limited, due to the preference of shopping-center owners for established large chains. . . . And the capital requirements for opening a new supermarket — about $700,000 exclusive of the cost of land (R. 1286-1288) — are by no means negligible. . . . The merger certainly will not increase the ease of entry, and it may have the opposite effect."

No one has ever contended that the merger will "increase the ease of entry" but there is absolutely no record or other support for appellant's speculation that "it may have the opposite effect." Appellant's assertions are otherwise completely fallacious:

(a) While it is true that shopping center owners prefer an established large chain (Fdg. 54, R. 3081), it is likewise true that prior to the merger Von's* was able to and did obtain shopping center locations. (Fdg. 54, R. 3081.) The merger changed nothing in this respect. Moreover, it is equally true that not all good grocery store locations are in shopping centers (Fdg. 54, R. 3081.) Most of the stores in this area are "free standing" stores, not in a shopping center, and this is true of the stores of the larger chains. (R. 1329-1331.)

(b) While capital requirements for opening a new supermarket may approximate $700,000 exclusive of the cost of land (R. 1286-1288), most supermarkets are leased by the operator, not purchased (R. 1314).

* And Shopping Bag also (R. 152, 277, 1438).

Moreover, appellant assumes (erroneously) that the new entrant to be successful must start out with a new supermarket. This ignores business realities. The new entrant typically, as the record shows, starts out with an existing, older store and takes off from that point. (R. 278, 1314.) As appellant points out (Br. 12), in the period 1948-1958 the chains "disposed of a substantial number of unwanted outlets." The fact is and the record shows (R. 1472, 1476, 1489, Fdg. 49, R. 3079-3080) that the leading chains furnish the training, the experience, and frequently the stores for their future competitors. (Fdg. 81, R. 3088.) Witness Harlos Gross, for example, took over an old "unwanted" Shopping Bag store and was able to increase its gross sales from $600,000 to $1 million and maintain them at that figure despite the fact that the number of competing retail grocery stores within a two-mile radius increased from five in 1953 to 17 by 1960. (R. 1411-1413.) Witness Cecil Dobson took over an older, "unwanted" former Thriftimart store and increased its gross sales from $1 million to $2 million despite the fact that he faces competition from newer and larger stores of various chains in his shopping area. (R. 1393-1396.)

The many executives of chains who resign their positions to take over an older store and thus start their own business attest to the unlikelihood of market foreclosure by the leading chains. (R. 1396-1402, 1417-1422, 1402-1406, 1407-1411, 1448-1451, 1483-1487, 1495-1499.) If, as the appellant suggests, the existence of larger chains may discourage future entry by single-store operators, one must wonder how these experienced and knowledgeable grocery executives could be so blind as not to see what appellant professes to foresee so clearly. The record shows (Fdgs. 28, 44-49, R. 3072-3074, 3077-3080) that persons with experience can and do enter the business with relative ease and can reasonably expect to prosper in competition with the large chains and others.

B. The intense price competition which exists in the Los Angeles market is completely inconsistent with the charge that the market was approaching oligopoly conditions.

Both before and after the merger, vigorous price competition has characterized the Los Angeles market (R. 1234-1235, 1340-1341, 1344, 3031) with rival concerns featuring in their advertisements reduced prices on many and different products. Government exhibit 24, unprinted, is a collection of advertisements of some of the rivals of Von's. That exhibit shows that these concerns each offered reduced prices on a wide variety of products. Where the identical product was advertised, prices of the respective chains frequently varied.* This is not the "interdependent" pricing of oligopolists. Indeed, the actual commercial practice in the market place is a refutation of the charge that the market has oligopolistic characteristics.

* For example (Gx. 24, unprinted) shows the following prices for March 3, 1960:

Quaker Oats
Ralphs	— 42 oz.	39¢
Safeway	— 42 oz.	37¢
Pillsbury Flour
Ralphs	— 5 lb. bag	67¢
Safeway	— 5 lb. bag	49¢

Toilet Tissue
Ralphs	— 4 rolls Zee	39¢
Market Basket	— 4 rolls Zee	29¢
Jello
Market Basket	—	1 pkge 5¢
Hughes	—	16 pkges $1.00
Coffee
Food Giant	— 1 lb. Maxwell House	49¢
Alpha Beta	— 1 lb. MJB	79¢
Lipton Soup Mix
(a) Onion
Ralphs	— pkge of 2	35¢
Market Basket	— pkge of 2	29¢
Fox	— pkge of 2	37¢
Shoppers	— pkge of 2	35¢
(b) Chicken Noodle
Ralphs	— pkge of 3	43¢
Market Basket	— pkge of 3	39¢
Shoppers	— pkge of 3	41¢
(c) Tomato-Vegetable
Market Basket	— pkge of 2	25¢
Shoppers	— pkge of 2	29¢
Hunt's Tomato Sauce
Food Giant	— 4-8 oz. cans	25¢
Shoppers	— 15-8 oz. cans	$1.00
C & H Powdered or Brown Sugar
Ralphs	—2-1 lb. pkges	35¢
Market Basket	— 2-1 lb. pkges	25¢
Campbell's Tomato Soup
Alpha Beta	— 10½ oz. can	10 for $1.00
Fox	—10½ oz. can	2 for 23¢

The advertisements for each week covered by Gx. 24, unprinted, show similar examples of price cutting by the separate grocery chains. Moreover, a reference to any of the current Thursday issues of the Los Angeles Times or Wednesday issues of neighborhood newspapers readily demonstrates that fierce price competition continues to characterize this market.

Although admitting that concentration has not "reached the stage where vigorous price competition was seriously impaired" (Br. 35, and see headnote Br. p. 42), appellant erroneously asserts that the Los Angeles market is approaching "oligopoly conditions" with the chains on the way to "consciously interdependent pricing." (Br. 34-35). As purported evidence of this erroneous conclusion, appellant cites (Br. 35) the fact that the major chains were accustomed to study carefully the prices charged by competing major chains* (and, it should be noted, of smaller chains and independents, Gx. 26, R. 2382-2383); that they evidently believed they could not afford to be undersold; that the chains check stores of competitors, and that Von's maintained and kept copies of the weekly advertisements of major chains, including Shopping Bag advertisements. (Gx. 24, unprinted.)

---

* Appellant asserts also that "each strove to maintain the same prices as the others." (Br. 35.) Apparently this misconception arises from Mr. Hayden's testimony, quoted Br. 6, fn. 6, that "we know that we can't demand any more from the customer than the other fellow on a nationally known item." Obviously, however, Mr. Hayden was referring to shelf prices, not specials. When a product is put on a shelf the price is already stamped on it. These are "shelf prices". When these shelf prices are reduced, they are known as "specials." It is not feasible to stamp a new price on items each time the price is changed. Anyone shopping at the typical supermarket can observe that the checker has and uses a list which shows the special prices at which many items are being sold.

 Several of the industry witnesses operating single stores testified that they regularly check the stores of the leading chains and that the chain store managers check the stores of their smaller competitors. (R. 279-280, 306-307, 1398, 1432).

The practice of checking stores of competitors and becoming conversant with their prices on a day-to-day basis does not at all indicate "conscious interdependent pricing (Br. 35)." Professor Cassady has correctly pointed out* that "A vendor involved in an intensive competitive situation will exert considerable effort in attempting to find out how competitors are faring" and *"If they are to compete effectively, retail vendors must keep themselves informed regarding the prices of rival sellers . . ."

If appellant's economic theory has validity it would only be so as applied to an industry which is relatively static and has high entry barriers (see e.g. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 280), not in an industry characterized by easy entry and rapid shifts in market shares.

Moreover, when a new type of merchandising institution (such as the discount house) enters the market,

Kaysen and Turner, Antitrust Policy (1959) point out (p. 40) that the significance of market structure is far greater in mining and manufacturing than in retail trade, service and construction industries. It has also been observed that:

> " . . . This practice of live-and-let-live is feasible, in the absence of formal agreement or understanding, only in a market of few sellers. Of course, in the case of consumer goods advertised and sold to unidentified members of the general public, the practice is, absent market division, not possible even in an oligopolistic market." Comment, 68 Yale L.J. 1627, 1641 (1959).

competition increases. This situation occurred in the Los Angeles market in 1961 as a result presumably of successful competitive efforts of several aggressive discount house food operations:

> "In mid 1961 one of the most important supermarket institutions in the Los Angeles area dropped shelf prices drastically on 3 fast selling items—sugar, coffee (all brands), and bread (its own brand). This move was met almost immediately by at least two important competing supermarket concerns. Shortly thereafter, a small but aggressive supermarket chain operator announced that he was dropping prices of 'over 3,640' items in one of his stores (on a test basis) and patronizing this establishment would require 'no membership cards or fees.' This was promptly followed by specially announced moves on the part of leading supermarket concerns in the area, one of which stated in its advertising that it was dropping shelf prices of over 1,000 items. The items publicized were mainly the fast-moving type: margarine, soups, detergents, soaps, shortening, paper products, flour, mayonnaise, gelatins, canned and powdered milk, baby foods, coffee, sugar, and bread. Comparative prices given in this one advertisement indicated that reductions ran approximately 10 per cent."*

Articles in trade papers in the years following the trial demonstrate that, contrary to appellant's economic theory, price competition in this area continues to be intense.* Such competition is utterly inconsistent with the charge that this market is approaching oligopoly either in structure or performance.

---

* See, e.g., Grocery Bulletin, May 7, 1965: "Chains Meet Discount Threat In Area With Price Slashes"; Supermarket News, May 17, 1965: "Von's Stress On Price Cuts Cues Others"; Grocery Bulletin, October 15, 1965: "Discount Price Battle Breaks Out Among Chains In Metropolitan Los Angeles Area"; Supermarket News, January 3, 1966: "Los Angeles — Fierce competition from discount supermarkets during 1965 forced most conventional chains here to lower prices and in turn watch profit margins sink." Chain Store Age (Western Supermarket Executives Edition) March 1966, pp. W1 and W2: "Two factors have prompted Western chains to seek new roads to tomorrow's earnings: 1. Stiffening internal competition: Not only is there razor-sharp competition among conventional supermarkets, but discounters, drive-in dairies and deli-liquor stores are also trying to cut a bigger piece of the Western market pie. 2. External competition from Eastern chains entering Western territory: These expansion-oriented firms not only want a beachhead on the West Coast, but they come equipped with timetables for new store openings."

C. Neither the decline in number of stores nor acquisitions made by others indicate a tendency toward oligopoly in the Los Angeles market.

1. The individual grocer, and the smaller concerns, aided by cooperative wholesalers, remain major competitive forces.

The number of grocery stores in this area has declined largely because of the development of the supermarket and more widespread use of the automobile which deprived the former small corner grocery store of its local neighborhood monopoly (Fdg. 24, R. 3070-3071). Presumably these were "the marginal grocery operators whom 'the supermarket' revolution has made technologically and competitively obsolete." (App. Br. 31.)* Nevertheless, there is scarcely a single household in the entire Los Angeles Metropolitan Area which does not have a choice of from three to ten competitive grocery stores within convenient shopping distance. (Fdgs. 26, R. 3071.)

But the gradual disappearance of the small, old style grocery store does not mean the small businessman will disappear from the grocery industry, as appellant apparently concedes (Br. 31). Nor can the leading chains price their products without regard for the many single-

---

* According to the January 1960 staff report to the Federal Trade Commission entitled Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I — Concentration and Integration in Retailing, p. 10, the number of grocery stores nationwide decreased by more than 110,000 between 1939 and 1954 and the "whole decrease from 1939 to 1954 occurred in the class of stores selling less than $50,000 a year."

store operators with whom they compete: the toughest competitors for the leading chains are often the single-store operators. (See, e.g., R. 1328, R. 1388, R. 1392, R. 1396, R. 1397, R. 1404, R. 1408, R. 1412, R. 1421, R. 1430, R. 1432, 2061.)*

The prospect for the foreseeable future is that the hundreds of single-store operators will continue to thrive and at the same time provide vigorous competition for the larger chains. This is due primarily to the existence in this area of the two largest cooperative buying organizations in the world, Certified Grocers of California, Ltd. and Orange Empire Co-op. The growth of these cooperatives has been phenomenal: In 1948 Certified's wholesale sales to its member-owners amounted to $86,829,000 and its members' retail sales were $382,000,000 — by 1958 Certified's wholesale sales to its members had more than tripled, to $338,957,000 and so had its members' retail sales — to $1,390,000,000. (R. 1641-1645, Fdg. 34, R. 3076). Orange Empire had a similarly spectacular growth: Its wholesale sales to its members were $12,500,000 in 1945 and were $321,000,000 in 1962. (Fdg. 35, R. 3076) These cooperative buying organizations provide their members with group buying advantages as well as many other advantages and are, without doubt, a decisive factor in the continued vitality and growth of smaller concerns (Fdgs. 29-37, R. 3074-3076).

* Illustrative of the vitality of the smaller competitors and their ability to compete with stores of the larger chains is the comment of W. H. Crawford, a single-store operator. He testified he had no problem competing with the chains; that "the question is not whether I can compete against them, but whether they can compete against me." (R. 1388 and see R. 2061.)

The January 1960 Staff Report To The Federal Trade Commission* noted that more than a fourth of all cooperative wholesale sales are in California and that "Although the unaffiliated retailer is rapidly losing position, voluntary and cooperative distributors have shown a capacity for effective competition with the corporate chains." This is certainly true in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. (Fdgs. 29-37, R. 3074-3076.) Membership in Certified Grocers or Orange Empire is open to anyone (R. 1208, 3026) and the single-store operator can thus obtain his merchandise and related services at a cost comparable to that of the direct-buying large chain.

Since smaller grocers have always been and still are the primary support of Certified Grocers, that cooperative would naturally be opposed to any merger which might adversely affect the competitive opportunities of individual retailers in the area. However, both the former President and the Chairman of the Board of Certified Grocers testified that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag would not have such an effect. (R. 1483-1487, 1641-1645.) The District Court felt that "considerable weight" (R. 3027-3028) should be accorded the testimony (R. 1641-1645) of Campbell Stewart, former President of Certified Grocers. This testimony as well as that of the single-store operators and officers of small and large chains fully supports the conclusion that there is no tendency toward oligopoly in the Los Angeles grocery market.

See Dx. AV, R. 2869-2880.

2. The fact that some other concerns had previously made acquisitions should not invalidate this merger.

Government exhibits 44 and 45 (R. 2418-2420) indicate that between 1949 and 1958 ten of what were the leading 20 grocery concerns as of 1958 had acquired some 126 grocery stores in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. Forty per cent of the acquisitions (48 stores with gross sales of $71,537,000) were made by Fox Markets, Yor-Way and McDaniels. All three of these firms had become bankrupt prior to the time the exhibits were prepared.* It is apparent that growth by acquisition is by no means an assurance of a successful operation and does not necessarily or in fact lead to undue concentration. (See R. 1233-1234).

Indeed, the evidence was clear that the growth in market share of the top 20 concerns of which appellant complains was due primarily to internal growth of

* Yor-Way commenced doing business in 1953 and thereafter expanded rapidly by acquisition. Following the death of its founder, Mr. Kennedy, in 1961 it suffered reverses and eventual bankruptcy. Fox Markets was first organized in 1954 and it likewise expanded very rapidly primarily by an aggressive acquisition program. Because of too rapid expansion, undercapitalization and lack of qualified management in depth, Fox Markets became bankrupt. McDaniels, for largely the same reasons likewise became bankrupt in 1961. (Fdg. 49, R. 3080, and R. 1649-1650, 1222-1225, 1537-1538.) The bulk of the Yor-Way, Fox and McDaniels stores were sold off to single-store operators and small chains in 1961 and 1962. (R. 1649-1650, 1236.)

It should also be noted here that the exhibit is in error in showing an acquisition by Food Giant from itself of six stores doing an annual volume of $31,700,000. Actually this was simply a change of name by Food Giant (R. 1535).

smaller concerns, many of them new entrants. (Fdgs. 27-28, 80-81, R. 3072-3074, 3087-3088.) The following table taken from Dx. AN, R. 2788, indicates the growth between 1948 and 1958 of concerns not shown to have made any acquisitions in that period:

Company	Market Share 1948	1958
Von's	2.4	4.7
Shopping Bag	1.2	4.2
Market Basket	2.2	4.4
Boys'	.9	1.3
Shoppers*	.0	.8
Alexander's	.5	1.1
	7.2	16.5

Also, as noted above, in this same period the leading concerns, some of which are listed by Dr. Mueller as having made acquisitions, disposed of a "substantial number of unwanted outlets" (App. Br. 12) and thus provided an opportunity for new entrants. (Fdgs. 49, 81, R. 3079-3080, 3088, and see R. 1476, 1489-1490, 1651-1652).

D. New forms of competition are resulting in even more intense rivalry than existed in the past.

In 1963 there were 35 discount houses with grocery departments doing business in the Los Angeles area. (Fdg. 61, R. 3082-3083.) They are becoming a factor of increasing importance in the grocery business in Los

* Shoppers did have one market in 1948. (R. 1478.)

Angeles. (R. 54, 233-234, 236,237, 360, 510-512, 614, 759,761, 2324-2327, 1439-1445, 1646-1648, 3027, Fdg. 61, R. 3028.) Their food prices are often lower than the chain grocers in part because of lower operating costs and in part because they often use low food prices to attract customers who may buy appliances and other items on which markups are higher. In addition, surveys have indicated that average sales per customer and average sales per square foot of selling space are higher in discount houses than in supermarkets. (R. 1590, 1739-1740.) At least one industry observer* has predicted that within a few years the discount houses will relegate today's supermarkets to the role of the "Mom and Pop" store. (R. 1586-1589.) Regardless of the accuracy of this prediction the discount house is a new and dynamic competitive force in the area. Appellant's effort to deprecate the importance of the discount house as a competitive factor (Br. 41, fn. 39) is rebutted by Professor Cassady, by appellant's witnesses (R. 54, 233-237, 360, 510-512, 614, 690, 759-761), by studies made by the Department of Agriculture (R. 1590), and by the Opinion of the District Court (R. 3027) and Finding 61, R. 3082.

In addition to discount houses there has been an influx of bantam or convenience stores. (Fdg. 62, R. 3082.) Milk depots, which by California law are permitted to sell milk, an important draw item for a grocery store (R. 240-241), at a lesser price are increasing in number.

---

* Government witness (on other matters) Dr. Jenssen.

See p. 24, post.

They have captured 16% of the milk market and they also sell other grocery items. (Fdg. 63, R. 3083 and see R. 240-241, 467-468.) Liquor stores are selling more and more other grocery products — some sell more bread than some supermarkets. (Fdg. 64, R. 3083.) Indeed, the record demonstrates that grocery retailing in the Los Angeles area has been and promises to be a constantly changing, highly competitive business — one in which the aggressive individual competitor can and does survive and the consumer is well served.

II. THE LOSS OF ONE COMPETITOR WITH A MARKET SHARE OF LESS THAN 5% DOES NOT HAVE A REASONABLE PROBABILITY OF LESSENING COMPETITION IN A MARKET WHICH IS AS FRAGMENTED AND COMPETITIVE AS LOS ANGELES.

A. Withdrawal of Shopping Bag as a separate competitive factor had no significant actual or potential adverse effect on competition.

What was lost to the market by this merger was a single chain with a 4% market share. What remained were five of the largest national chains, two sectional chains, seventeen "local" chains with ten or more stores, 126 other chains and several thousand single-store operators backed up by huge cooperative buying organizations. (Fdgs. 75-77, R. 3085-3086, and Fdgs. 29-38, R. 3074-3076). Moreover, after the merger, the Shopping Bag stores were upgraded and became more effective competitive units. (R. 1249-1251.)

Appellant nevertheless attaches great importance to the fact that Shopping Bag was one of seven firms listed in the Key Survey book, a weekly publication sold "primarily to retailers who operate one, two or three stores—the so-called independents." (R. 1648.)* The Key Survey book lists the shelf prices charged for some 3000 grocery items (Gx. 21, 22, R. 2369, 2374) but "it does not purport to reflect actual prices being charged by the chains surveyed on all items at any given point of time." (R. 1646-1647.) Regardless of its being listed in the Key Survey book Shopping Bag was not considered a price leader. A survey of the market with particular reference to Von's, Shopping Bag and Alexander's Markets made by an employee of the Kroger Company in 1957 concluded that "general observations indicate that their [Shopping Bag and Alexander's] retails are slightly higher than either Ralphs or Von's." (Dx. AF, R. 2749, 2755.)

Government witness Palmer, the sole stockholder of a four-store chain with annual sales of $6 million, testified as follows:

> "Q. Do you recall . . . you told me that you had felt that Shopping Bag before the merger were real good competitors?
> "A. Yes. I don't recall that in the conversation, but that is a fact. That is what I recall.
>
> "Q. Do you recall saying this is because their prices were a little higher than the others?
> "A. I could have said that.

---

* Shopping Bag was not listed in a rival survey book (R. 1647).

"Q. Do you recall saying that Von's sells at lower prices than the other chains and therefore you felt this merger was bad?

"A. Yes, I could have said that because that is the way I feel.

"Q. I direct your attention to several prices (advertised in the Los Angeles Times July 13, 1961) and I ask you to read the headline first, please, Mr. Palmer.

"A. 'Von's and Shopping Bag Slashes Food Prices Permanently. Over 1,000 Regular Prices Slashed. Now a New Low Price.'

"Q. Were these actually slashed prices?

"A. Yes.

• • •

"Mr. Hughes (government counsel): Q. Did Shopping Bag do any price slashing such as this prior to the merger?

"A. No."

(R. 681-682 and R. 720-721.)*

---

* Nevertheless, the witness testified that he was able to and did meet these prices by cutting overhead without suffering a loss of profits. He further testified this price reduction enabled the chains and single-store operators to become more competitive with the discount houses (R. 726-727).

1. The testimony of industry witnesses demonstrates that the merger will not lessen competition.

The crucial importance of industry witnesses was underscored by the Government in its brief filed with this Court in the Brown Shoe case* and was also emphasized in the opinion of this Court in that case. (370 U.S. at p. 344.) In the lower court Appellant consistently deprecated the importance of such testimony; here, it simply ignores it. We suggest the explanation is obvious: In Brown Shoe such testimony established the Government's case; here it destroys the Government's case.

The defense industry witnesses gave solid reasons to support their respective conclusions that this merger is not likely substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. While recognizing that the larger chains have certain advantages, they pointed to the counterbalancing advantages of aggressive and experienced operators of single stores and smaller chains. (R. 1387-1499.) These include:

* In its brief filed with the United States Supreme Court in the Brown Shoe case, the Government stated in part:

> "This Court has said that '[t]he existence of competition . . . is a fact disclosed by observation rather than the process of logic' (International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 299). Recognizing the validity of this proposition, the government called as its major witnesses 24 retailers who represented a cross-section of the retail shoe industry. . . ." (Government Brief at pp. 63-64).

Unlike the industry testimony in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank 374 U.S., 321, 367.

(a) Membership in a cooperative buying organization which, in addition to other valuable services provided, enables them to purchase their groceries as cheaply as the larger chains;

(b) Their ability to purchase their meat and produce at prices comparable to those of the larger chains;

(c) Their greater flexibility in making price and other changes;

(d) Their greater opportunity to provide personal service, participate in community affairs and thus develop a loyal patronage; and

(e) Personal supervision and on-the-scene management.

The defense presented a representative cross-section of industry witnesses: Twelve single-store operators (whose gross annual volume ranged from $1 million to $4 million), nine representatives of concerns operating from two to nine grocery stores, nine representatives of chains having ten or more stores, five officials of Von's and five representatives of suppliers. These witnesses testified to the continued vigor of competition, the opportunity for new entrants, the ability of smaller concerns to compete and grow, the inability of the larger concerns to dominate the market, and the absence of any likelihood that this merger might substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Each gave concrete reasons to support his conclusion. (R. 1387 to R. 1645.) Except for three of the five Von's officials, the Government failed to cross-examine any of these defense witnesses. Their testimony stands unchallenged and it is impressive proof that this merger has not had and is not likely to have an anti-competitive effect. We submit that this "formidable array of testimony by experienced retailers cannot be minimized . . . ."*

2. Sufficient "major competitive factors" remain to assure vigorous competition.

Many large national and sectional concerns do business in the Los Angeles area. The following table lists 1962 total assets, total sales, and numbers of stores for all areas of these grocery concerns which compete in the Los Angeles area (Dx. L, R. 2568-2573):

Name of Firm	Total Stores	Total Sales	Assets (millions)
A & P	4,475	$5 billion	$767
Safeway	2,069	2.5 billion	473
Kroger	1,354	2 billion	400
Acme	845	1 billion	209
Food Fair	465	1 billion	193
Mayfair	178	288 million	62
Lucky	141	232 million	47

In addition there are approximately 17 "local" chains operating ten or more stores in the area (seven of which were not operating as many as two stores as late as 1952) and 126 other concerns operating two or more stores in this area. (Fdg. 77, R. 3086.) It is apparent also, we believe, that even the single store operators, such as

* Government Brief on the appeal in Brown Shoe at pp. 63-64.

After the merger Von's had 66 stores, sales of approximately $180 million and assets of $42 million. (R. 15, Fdgs. 3, 6, R. 3064-3065).

Messrs. Crawford, Dahl, Dobson, Elkin, Goldberg, Goldstein, Gross, Hines, Irwin, Richard, Roberts, and Sherry (R. 1387-1433) and the operators of smaller chains such as Messrs. Gelson, Gilbert, Godfrey, Goodnight, Inadomi, Jones, Miller, and Wilson (R. 1434-1467) are "substantial competitive factors" in this market. It seems apparent that appellant has grossly exaggerated the significance of the disappearance of Shopping Bag as a separate competitive factor.

3. Appellant is in error in its attempt to inflate the amount of overlap in the draw areas of particular Von's and Shopping Bag stores.

The operations of the two companies complemented each other with little overlap in the geographical areas each served (Fdgs. 4, 10, 12, 53, R. 3065-3066, 3080-3081). The District Court found that Von's and Shopping Bag were able to compete for the same customers in "only four or five areas." (Fdg. 53, R. 3080-3081.) Most of Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area and Shopping Bag's in the northern and eastern portions of that area. (Fdgs. 4, 10, 12, R. 3065-3066, and see Fdg. 53, R. 3080-3081.)

Nevertheless, relying on a survey by its witness, Dr. Jenssen (Dx. BK, R. 3011-3016; and see Gx. 85, App. C to App. Br.) and his testimony (R. 2024-20) that the "average customer was willing to drive at least 10 minutes, or about 4 miles, and to pass by other stores, in order to reach a particular store (Fdg. 39, R. 3076)" (Br. 7),* appellant asserts that "almost half the stores of the two concerns, with aggregate sales of approximately $76 million were in a position to compete directly . . . ." (Br. 7-8.) This is a gross overstatement of the amount of competitive overlap:

(a) It assumes that each of the two stores could compete for all of the customers served by the other, with the result that appellant's $76 million figure represents total sales rather than the pertinent figure, namely, possible sales to customers in the more limited areas from which stores of the two concerns could possibly draw the same customers;

(b) It ignores physical barriers such as hills, freeways and the like (Fdg. 39, R. 3076, and see R. 2065-2071); and

(c) Dr. Jenssen's study (Dx. BK, R. 3011-3016) actually found that only 54% of those interviewed shopped "regularly" (more than 6 times a month) or "frequently" (4 to 6 times a month) at retail food

---

* An earlier study Dr. Jenssen had made for Shoppers Markets for their store in Norwalk indicated that 67% of the customers came from a one-mile radius and 94% from within a two-mile radius. (Dx. BJ, R. 3002-3010 and see R. 2048-2050). And see an earlier (1955) study which indicates the much more limited draw area of Von's stores (Dx. S, R. 2623-2630).

stores located at such a distance from their homes (R. 3027 and Dx. Bk., R. 3011).*

Assuming, however, for argument's sake that even as much as 50% of the sales of the Von's-Shopping Bag stores in question could represent possible overlap competition, this would represent at most $38 million in possible overlap sales between Von's and Shopping Bag — or 1.5% of the $2½ billion grocery sales in the Los Angeles area. In Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., this Court declared that a total foreclosure of competition for a period of twenty years is not illegal if it does not involve a substantial share of the relevant market; that a mere showing that a substantial number of dollars is involved ordinarily is of little consequence; that a preemption of less than 1% of competition "is, conservatively speaking, quite insubstantial", and that "While $128,000,000 [here $38 million by the most generous of tests] is a considerable sum of money, even in these days, the dollar volume, by itself is not the test, . . . " (365 U.S. 320, 327-334).

Moreover, appellant's discussion of overlap necessarily focuses on competition between the acquired and acquiring concerns and thus ignores the fact that in the purported overlap areas there were at least six stores of other chains and a number of stores of other concerns readily available to the population in those areas. (Fdg.

* Another 16%, according to Dr. Jenssen's study, shopped at such a distance "occasionally" but since this question was defined as "less than 4 times a month" (R. 3011) we suggest the answer is meaningless — it could mean once or twice a year. Thirty percent never shopped at such a distance. (Dx. BK, R. 3011).

53, R. 3080-3081). This Court has stated that the test is broader, i.e., the effect on competition generally:

> " . . . Section 7 of the Clayton Act, prior to its amendment, focused upon . . . lessening of competition between the acquiring and the acquired companies. The 1950 amendments made plain Congress' intent that the validity of such combinations was to be gauged on a broader scale: their effect on competition generally in an economically significant market." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 335.

B. Post acquisition evidence confirms that this acquisition will not have an anti-competitive effect.

Industry witnesses called by the Government and the defense confirmed the fact that competition remains vigorous; many testified competition has increased in vigor; "that is the trend" (R. 249); "there is more competion now than ever" (R. 449); "competition generally, increases every year" (R. 1425); it seems to be steadily increasing" (R. 1482); it has been "enhanced since the merger" (R. 1498); "competition is and always has been vigorous. It is becoming more so as the passage of time brings change, not only in the geographic area of competition faced by any store, but in the form, content and character of competition as well." (R. 1640.)

Appellant concedes that the "market remains vigorously competitive" but nevertheless urges that this fact "is entitled to little weight." (Br. 42.) In the court below, appellant strongly contended that post-acquisition evidence could not even be considered (R. 2111-2116). In this Court, appellant merely deprecates the importance of such evidence. We suggest the reason for deprecating the importance of the evidence is apparent: despite the more than three years which had elapsed since the merger occurred, appellant was totally unable to point to any diminution of competition generally in the market area.

This Court has recently emphasized that post-acquisition evidence is relevant in a merger case but that the "force of § 7 is still in probabilities, not in what later transpired" (Federal Trade Commission v. Consolidated Foods Corp., 380 U.S. 592, 598). However, in a case (as here) where appellant concedes that:

(a) "[O]pportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial" and the probability is that "for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive" (Br. 16); and

(b) The market remains "vigorously competitive" (Br. 42); and

(c) Concentration has not reached the stage where "vigorous price competition" is "seriously impaired" (Br. 35), then the post-acquisition data would seem considerably more reliable than appellant's proposed "economic prophecy". (Br. 23.)

C. None of the merger cases decided by this Court supports reversal of the trial court.

The foundation case under amended Section 7, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, involved a large national chain which, through a series of acquisitions, had integrated its manufacturing operations with its retail operations to the proven disadvantage of small, nonintegrated, retail competitors. Moreover, the Court said that the tendency toward concentration in the shoe industry was being "accelerated through giant steps striding across a hundred cities at a time." 370 U.S. at 346.

The combined market shares for Brown and Kinney in women's shoes in 114 cities ranged from a low of 5.1% in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to a high of 57.7% in Dodge City, Kansas; in children's shoes it ranged from a low of 5% to a high of 51.8%; in men's shoes the combined market shares ranged from a low of 5.1% to a high of 24.8%, and for all shoes the combined market shares for 35 cities ranged from a low of 10% to a high of 35.8%, and by Standard Metropolitan Area* the combined market share ranged from a low of 2.5% to a high of 22.6% for all shoe sales. (370 U.S. at 347-354, App. A-D.)

By contrast, in the case at bar, the government is not urging that the merger had anticompetitive implications of a vertical character. Moreover, even on the basis of appellant's 1958 market share statistics, the top concern following the merger had only an 8.9% market share; the top two 16.9%; the top four 24.4%; the top eight 40.9%; the top twelve 48.8%; the top sixteen 53.4%; and the top twenty only an aggregate market share of 56%. (Br. 13 and Gx. 7, R. 2331.)

Brown Shoe was amplified in United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, but neither the facts nor the language of that case stand as a barrier to affirmance of the judgment of the court below. In Philadelphia Nat. Bank, the merger produced a bank controlling 30% of a highly concentrated market marked by high entrance barriers in which four concerns controlled 78% of the business. Moreover, after the merger, the two leading banks in Philadelphia would have controlled 58% of the total bank assets, deposits, and loans in the relevant market area.

In Philadelphia Nat. Bank this Court laid down the much-quoted test that "a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen the competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anti-competitive effects." 374 U.S. at 363. In contrast to Philadelphia Bank, this merger produced a combined percentage share of 1.4% of the grocery stores and 7.5% of sales in the relevant market. Cf. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. at 364 n. 41. The increase in concentration is far from "significant": in the decade prior to the merger, the market shares of the leading chains had been decreasing. (Fdgs. 74, 78, R. 3084-3086). As a result of the merger, the market share of the leading two concerns increased from 14.1 to 15.1% (Dx. AM-AN, R. 2787-2788; Fdgs. 74, 78, R. 3084-3086).

In United States v. First National Bank, 376 U.S. 665, the merged bank was larger than all of the remaining banks combined, having more than 50% of the bank assets, deposits, and loans in the market area there held to be relevant. It is plainly inapposite because, unlike the Von's-Shopping Bag merger, the merger of the banks involved in that case produced a bank controlling an "undue" percentage of an already concentrated market.

In United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, this Court found that the "line of commerce showed highly concentrated markets," with the domination by a few companies producing an "oligopolistic" structure (completely unlike that present in the grocery industry in Los Angeles). 377 U.S. 278-80. In this setting, the Court found that the acquisition of Rome Cable by Alcoa, the market leader with 27.8%, was a violation of Section 7 despite the relatively small share of the acquired company in the aluminum conductor market.

In United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, the relevant product market was dominated by six firms having a total of 70.1% of the business. The merger produced a company with 25% of the market which the court found to be violative of Section 7 in an industry where, in sharp contrast to the grocery business in the Los Angeles area, there had been a "history of tendency toward concentration." 378 U.S. at 461.

The distinctions between the recent decisions of this Court and the instant case are both numerous and substantive. Here, the combined market share is much smaller; the market as a whole is atomistic; the market is dynamic and expanding; the trend is away from concentration; entry is classically easy; the competitive effectiveness of a particular retail store is not dependent upon the size of the concern which owns it, and new forms of competition have arisen to heighten already vigorous price competition.

III. THE MERGER WILL HAVE A BENEFICIAL EFFECT ON COMPETITION AND ON THE COMMUNITY.

A. The ability of a concern to grow and sell out advantageously serves economic welfare and acts as a spur to new entrants and thus increases competition.

In an unconcentrated market with low entry barriers (as here), the opportunity for the individual to start a business, grow by internal expansion, and eventually, if he so desires, sell on an advantageous basis tends to spur additional entrants. A continuous flow of new competitors can thus be expected—and this stimulates, adds to, and revitalizes competition. A rule-of-thumb prohibition of such opportunities will, we believe, stifle incentive to entry, aggressive competitive effort, and growth.

Since the record demonstrates that this merger is not likely to lessen competition (and appellant concedes that in the more than three years following the merger the market remained vigorously competitive) (Br. 42) we urge that there can be no compelling reason to deprive all concerned of the many beneficial effects of the merger, including:

(a) Cost savings;*

(b) Opportunity for the principal owners of two closely held corporation to create a more ready market for their securities by getting listed on the New York Stock Exchange;

(c) Substitution of a broad and able management group;

(d) Assurance to stockholders that they would receive an adequate return on their investment and that it would continue to be secure;

(e) Avoidance of the adverse effects that a possible decline or failure of Shopping Bag might have on the employees, the stockholders and the community; and

(f) Ability to obtain equity or debt financing, if necessary, on more advantageous terms. (Dx. AW at R. 2967 and Fdgs. 12-13, R. 3066-3069, and R. 1511, 1539-1541, Gx. 66, R. 2487-2491).

B. The sale by Shopping Bag was dictated by valid personal and business reasons.

Compelling reasons support the merger from the standpoint of Shopping Bag. The president and principal stockholder was advanced in years. He wished to dispose of the company on a favorable basis. The stock was not

---

* The importance of not using cost savings as a basis for invalidating mergers has heretofore been emphasized. Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Har. L. Rev. 1313, 1326 (1965).

listed and there was not an active market in it. Shopping Bag profits had been declining; management was thin; the president was concerned about the future of his company and the impact of further decline or possible failure upon his family, stockholders, employees, and the public. (R. 1506-1514; Fdg. 12, R. 3067-3068.)*

Shopping Bag was not a "failing company" but the concern of its president was not entirely without reason. The following table (Fdg. 12, R. 3067) shows Shopping Bag's total sales, net income, percentage of net income to total sales and percentage of net profit after taxes to total assets for the years 1957-1959. For purposes of comparison, comparable information for Von's is also set forth:

SHOPPING BAG

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Income to Total Assets
1957	$87,007,857	$1,360,986	1.6%	6.6%
1958	90,531,209	912,851	1.0%	3.9%
1959	84,403,866	770,122	.9%	3.2%

VON'S

Year	Total Sales	Net Income	% of Net Income to Total Sales	% of Net Income to Total Assets
1957	$89,990,056	$1,872,943	2.1%	12.7%
1958	94,483,993	1,947,367	2.1%	12.4%
1959	86,605,829	1,981,358	2.3%	10.8%

(A four week strike in January 1959 resulted in lower sales for each company in that year.)

* See also Gx. 66, R. 2487-2491. Three of the top 20 concerns did fail in 1961. (Fdg. 81, R. 3088.)

Estate tax considerations necessarily played an important part in the decision to merge. Prior to the merger the Von der Ahe family owned 80% of the Von's stock and Mr. Hayden and his family owned 60% of Shopping Bag's stock. The death of a member of either family who held a large number of shares would have resulted in severe estate tax problems requiring the forced sale of many shares of the closely held stock. Von's had only 3,280 public stockholders and Shopping Bag had only 2,064. The over-the-counter market in the stock of these companies was not active. The merger gave Von's a total of 5,344 public stockholders and a much broader and more active market for its stock—in fact, as a result of the merger the stock of the merged company became eligible for listing on the New York Stock Exchange and it was so listed in 1961. Therefore, the merger, as anticipated, has resulted in a much more favorable market for the sale of family-held stock should this become necessary to meet estate taxes or other needs. (R. 1506-1514, Fdg. 12, R. 3066-3068.)

C. The merger maintains local control of the business.

Shopping Bag no doubt could have been sold to one of the large national chains not then doing business in the area.* But the president of Shopping Bag preferred to deal with Von's. He had been acquainted with the Von der Ahe family for some 34 years and had confidence in their fairness, integrity and business ability. He knew that Von's had an able and deep management staff and that its business record in terms of profits in relation to sales and in relation to assets was one of the best in the entire food industry. (R. 1506-1514.) The acquisition of Shopping Bag by Von's was consistent with the "desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry." (See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 315-316.)

IV. THE NEW TEST PROPOSED BY THE GOVERNMENT IS UNWARRANTED BY THE STATUTE AND TOTALLY UNREALISTIC.

Appellant requests this Court to establish a rigid, rule of "presumptive illegality"* to strike down any merger of "substantial" concerns in any market, in any industry, in which any grouping of leading concerns appellant may choose has increased its aggregate market share. Appellant concedes that its test "calls more for an economic prophecy than for a conventional legal judgment." (Br. 23.) We suggest that economic prophecy has not reached a stage of reliability that it should supplant the record facts and the findings which demonstrate the prophecy is totally unreliable. Assistant Attorney General Turner has asserted:

> ". . . If you attack a merger, you have to make a judgment of what would happen in the future. Economics does not yet provide an adequate theoretical framework for this." 29 A.B.A. Antitrust Section, August 1965, p. 194.

Other authorities would also agree that economic analysis has not yet been formally developed to the point where it can usefully be incorporated into the law:

* Actually they mean per se. See p. 9, n., supra.

". . . Economic analysis, like the adjudicatory process, must center upon the individual case. Both its advocates and critics would agree that the concept of workable competition, or its necessary equivalent, has not yet been formally developed to the point where it can usefully be incorporated into the law itself. That is to say, indicia of monopoly that can be unswervingly and uniformly applied to all industries, irrespective of their market environment and stage of development, have not yet been clearly identified." Markham, The Per Se Doctrine And The New Rule of Reason, 22 Southern Economics Journal (1955) p. 29.

Appellant, in effect, suggests abandonment of the accepted test of reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition or tendency to monopoly in favor of economic prophecy applicable, as stated, to all mergers, all markets and all industries. This test would necessarily invalidate inoffensive and even beneficial mergers along with those which, with reasonable probability, may likely be anticompetitive. Assistant Attorney General Turner has stated:

". . . I have formed a fairly definite view that Section 7 cannot be effectively enforced except on the basis of more or less arbitrary rules — arbitrary in the sense that they may well apply in particular situations to mergers which an exhaustive investigation of the facts might disclose would not have, or do not have a likelihood of having, an adverse effect on competition."*

* 29 A.B.A., Antitrust Section, August 1965, p. 194.

More recently, Mr. Turner amplified his views as follows:

"Q What's the solution to the problem, as you see it?

"A To draw up broad rules or guidelines that will be right in the great majority of cases, and accept the fact that they will sometimes be wrong.

"For instance, I have made it clear that we will attack any merger between substantial and healthy competitors in almost any industry.

"But I wouldn't try to argue that there is going to be substantial harm to competition in every case in which two substantial competitors merge. And the antimerger act is concerned with probabilities, not certainties.

"Q Does that mean that you would rule out some 'good' mergers along with the 'bad' mergers?

"A Yes. But remember what I said: You simply can't predict what the economic effects are going to be in every individual case.

"We'll never really know which mergers would have worked out all right. And, if our rule is right most of the time, then the few instances in which it turns out to be wrong are probably not going to do much damage."

. . . . .

"Q Does it worry you that Federal Trade Commission figures show an increase in the number of mergers?

"A I'm not worried about the numbers as such.

"Q Why not?

"A What if most of the mergers, as is undoubtedly true, have no adverse effects on competition? The concern of the antitrust laws is whether mergers are likely to have anticompetitive consequences of some sort. The fact that the merger rate is going up doesn't necessarily establish that."*

We urge that appellant's proposal is not warranted by the statute or its legislative history. In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 321-322, this court stated:

". . . Congress indicated plainly that a merger had to be functionally viewed, in the context of its particular industry. . . ."

Elaborating upon the foregoing, this Court pointed out:

"Subsequent to the adoption of the 1950 amendments, both the Federal Trade Commission and the courts have, in the light of Congress' expressed intent, recognized the relevance and importance of economic data that places any given merger under consideration within an industry framework almost inevitably unique in every case. Statistics reflecting the shares of the market controlled by the industry leaders and the parties to the merger are, of course, the primary index of market power; but only a further examination of the particular market — its structure, history and probable future — can provide the appropriate setting for judging the probable anti-competitive effect of the merger." 370 U.S. at 322, fn. 38.)*

In United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 at 363, this Court said that the test of presumptive illegality there applied:

". . . lightens the burden of proving illegality only with respect to mergers whose size makes them inherently suspect in light of Congress' design in § 7 to prevent undue concetration. . . ."

* Moreover, appellant is in error in its statements (Br. 17 and fn. 23) that the legislative history of the Antimerger Act discloses that "Congress specifically referred to the retail grocery industry" as one of the industries of particular concern. Congress did specifically refer to mergers which had taken place in the field of "food and kindred products". H. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3. But appellant must concede that "food and kindred products" is a census category of manufacturers, not retailers. Only one retailer, Safeway is mentioned in the 1948 Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Merger Movement — a Summary Report and the discussion of Safeway related primarily to its backward vertical acquisitions of food manufacturers. Nor does the said Report of the Federal Trade Commission on which "Congress drew heavily in its consideration of the merger problem", (App. Br. 17, fn. 23) support appellant's new proposed per se test, because it very carefully states: "As in the case of other acquisitions cited in this report, the Commission takes no position as to whether any individual acquisition or group of acquisitions constitutes 'a substantial lessening of competition or tendency to create a monopoly.' Such a determination can be made only after an examination of the facts on a case-by-case basis." (Report, pp. 53-54, fn. 41.)

There is no warrant, however, for lightening the burden of proving illegality in the case of a merger of two concerns with small market shares in an unconcentrated market where the market shares of the leading two concerns have been declining, where the market shares of the top four aggregate only 24.4% (Gx. 7, R. 2331), where market share is not the equivalent of market power, where the small concern admittedly can compete effectively with the larger chains, and where entry is classically easy.*

Appellant clearly is requesting judicial legislation to correct what it considers inadequacies in the present law. With respect to comparable contentions prior to 1950 that "there was no need to amend § 7 because the loophole could be closed by judicial interpretation", the House Judiciary Committee responded

> ". . . the Commission has taken the position, and the committee believes rightly so, that any defect in the law, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, should be remedied through legislative rather than judicial action."

The Los Angeles retail grocery business is about as unconcentrated and vigorously competitive as any market

* Entry, of course, is not easy in the banking business. In Philadelphia Bank only one new bank had entered the market in the decade prior to 1961 and after ten years it had only one-third of 1% of the area's deposits. 374 U.S. at 367. The top two banks after merger in that case had a greater market share than the top twenty concerns in the present case. 374 U.S. at 331.

 H. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. p. 11.

in the United States. It is a dynamic and growing market characterized by ease of entry, innovation and technological changes. Small competitors flourish and consumers are well served. (Fdgs. 27-28, 43-44, R. 3072-3074, 3077-3079, and see R. 3031.) The market leaders have been unable to maintain, much less increase, their market shares. We urge it would not be appropriate to ignore the realities of the market place as demonstrated in the record and reflected in the findings of fact and substitute therefor appellant's proposed rigid test. Indeed, the basic vice of appellant's novel proposed test is that it substitutes theory and conjecture in place of reasonable probability, and, as applied to this merger at least, it is completely unrealistic.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the District Court should be affirmed.

Introduction and Summary of Argument	4
Argument	8
I. The merger should be viewed from its effects on competition generally in Los Angeles, instead of merely relying on market shares of the parties and aggregate shares for groups of companies	8
A. The merger is not of such size to be inherently suspect under an automatic market shares test	9
B. In the context of this case, the Government's reliance on concentration as a criterion is unwarranted and untenable	12
C. The proper antitrust yardsticks in this case require a probative analysis of the market's competitive environment	18
II. The Government's major reliance on the market position and competitive relation of Von's and Shopping Bag contravenes the legislative purpose, terms and proper application of Section 7	22
A. One legislative purpose of Section 7, as amended in 1950, was to broaden the area of inquiry and focus attention on the probable effects of the merger on competition generally in the relevant market	23
B. The terms of Section 7, as amended, do not support the Government's theory that the instant merger is illegal because of the size and competitive relationship of the merging firms	26
C. The proper application of Section 7 in this case does not rest on a test involving competition between the merging firms, or their share of the relevant market	28

III. The Government's mechanical test holding horizontal grocery mergers presumptively unlawful defeats antitrust policy 30

A. The standard of presumptive illegality based on changes in market structure provides a basis for prohibiting beneficial horizontal mergers involving relatively small firms 31

B. The Government's standard for proscribing horizontal mergers will penalize many relatively small operators 34

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

Brief of the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, as Amicus Curiae

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF THE ASSOCIATION

The National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States (hereinafter called "the association") respectfully submits this brief as amicus curiae because of the concern of its members. Written consent of all parties to file a brief was given under Rule 42(2).

The association is a non-profit membership trade association, founded in 1893, and incorporated in 1916 under the law of the District of Columbia, with its principal office and place of business at 360 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

It is a federation of over 100 state and local food retailer associations, and has approximately 40,000 members, including supermarket operators.

The Board of Directors of the organization—all of its officers and directors—are local operators. The association represents retail food distributors who conduct small and medium size local enterprises, a substantial and growing percentage of which are corporations subject to Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 USC § 18.

While, the appellees have a somewhat larger sales volume than that held by members whose interests prompt our concern, we believe that the Government's legal test to govern mergers between competitors in the highly competitive retail grocery field will impose a new and severe handicap on competitive growth and development of independent supermarket operators.

The interest of the association and its members in this case arises because of its many unique features. It is the first case to come before this Court in which the Government has challenged any merger in retail food distribution. It is the first involving appropriate standards for applying Section 7 to what the Government terms "an industry where large firms are not yet dominant and the opportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial", and which has a technology allowing relatively small firms to thrive for the indefinite future (Br. p. 16). It is the first action to reach this Court presenting substantial questions as to the proper tests under Section 7 applicable to a merger of concerns engaged solely in retail distribution.

The members of the association have an interest in this action because the design of the Government is to condemn the merger under a test of presumptive illegality, by applying a rigid mechanical formula based primarily on market share statistics without determining the probable effect of the merger on competition in the market. This issue is one of primary significance. The association is apprehensive that if the Government's position in this case is approved, it will result in penalizing the growth and success of many local operators in a manner that defeats antitrust policy. It is believed that the proposed construction of Section 7 will erode competitive strength of local retailers.

Finally, the association, now as in the past, supports effective enforcement of Section 7 and other antitrust laws. The best indication of it's good faith and credibility in this matter is referred to in the Government's brief (p. 10) where it calls attention to a study published in 1959 by the association, entitled The Merger Movement in Retail Food Distribution 1955-1958. When this study was published, no action had been taken under Section 7 challenging an acquisition in the industry. But now, seven years later, no one could be more surprised that the first case to reach this Court involves a merger of two local, largely family-owned companies, each having approximately 4 per cent of the market where the evidence shows so clearly that no harm to competition will result. Prior to filing this complaint, the association had consistently supported the Department of Justice in antitrust matters both before this Court and Congress. The organization's position in the instant case is believed consistent with its basic policy.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Essentially, the Government is seeking to outlaw the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag under a rule of presumptive unlawfulness based on a superstructure of statistics. Its major aim is to escape having to demonstrate the likelihood of substantial adverse competitive effect.

The trouble with this simplified theory is that it does not fit the facts in this case, and accordingly does not carry out the policy of the statute. The unique competitive situation shown in the record precludes use of a static mold which gives no consideration to the market setting.

The market involved is not structurally oligopolistic, and has exhibited no sign of monopolistic behavior. It contains effective antibodies which prevent any prospect of dominance by a few large concerns.

There is no image of bigness serving as a competitive advantage, and no colossus in the industry to support a presumption of illegality. Appellees are local, largely family-owned companies and serve a small part of the relevant market, which is strongly decentralized.

Quantitative measures of the merger in terms of market shares, market rank, market gap and concentration ratios do not support the position that precedential case authority opens the way for imposition of a test based on presumptive illegality. The 7 per cent of the Los Angeles market served by Von's after the merger is small, and will not produce significant concentration, or give Von's a decisive competitive advantage.

The Government's strict mechanical market shares theory for invalidating horizontal grocery mergers strikes indiscriminately at acquisitions having no demonstrable anticompetitive impact, as well as those strengthening competition. The Government's rigid and encompassing test forecloses normal and beneficial avenues for growth. Moreover its excessive reach stretches the application of the law to a point where it could actually produce anticompetitive effects and thereby become self-defeating.

There is no foundation in law or in fact for holding that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is unlawful. In view of the market facts in this case and the economic characteristics of the parties and the industry generally, we submit it is inappropriate to prescribe a test which relieves the Government of its burden to establish prohibited competitive effect in the first merger case pertaining to retail grocery distribution. Cf. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253 (1963).

I. The validity of the merger at bar should be tested on the basis of its actual and probable competitive effects generally in Los Angeles. The parties involved are small compared to their large market. They operate local businesses in a fragmented market. It is highly competitive, and smaller firms have shown an ability to compete vigorously. "[S]mall chains, and even some single-store enterprises, were able to operate efficiently and to hold their own in competition with the larger chains." Gov. Br. p. 16.

With respect to the industry nationally, the Government acknowledges that it is not one where large firms are dominant. "Furthermore, from all indications, its technology is such that, even today, and for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive." Gov. Br. p. 16.

A rule of presumptive unlawfulness has no place in this case. It has been applied where the market is dominated by a few companies, and where the merger will result in a further significant increase in concentration. Case authority authorizing a market shares test of presumptive illegality is inapposite here.

Figures in the record with respect to market shares held by larger firms in Los Angeles and nationally do not demonstrate anticompetitive effect, and the Government has indicated an uncertainty with respect to the degree of concentration in the relevant market it asserts has taken place and relies on to support its theory. The facts in this case discredit the Government's suggestion that the Los Angeles market is on the way to becoming excessively concentrated, and belie the assertion that concentration nationally is on the rise. A nation-wide trend toward supermarkets appears as a major influence reducing the number of grocery stores and increasing the importance of those in operation.

A telescopic view of this merger entails more than looking at the form of the market in terms of structure. It also requires that equal attention be given to its competitive substance.

II. In removing the "acquiring-acquired" test and the term "community" from the 1914 version of the statute, Congress intended that the standard for judging a horizontal merger applicable in this case be based on its competitive effect in the relevant market. Among the factors it considered important was the frequent desirability of improving the competitive position of local businesses. It was concerned about the danger of prohibiting horizontal mergers under mechanical rules. The 1950 amendments to the statute adopted a more meaningful standard concerned with demonstrable effect on competition. Congress avoided trying to classify harmful horizontal acquisitions on the basis of a few simple facts. It emphasized the primacy of competition, and not the competitive relationship of the merging firms or their share of the market.

III. The Government's simplified test will prejudice the growth of relatively small concerns and defeat the purpose of the statute. It will have adverse effects on local control of markets.

Holding a merger of the small proportions challenged here presumptively illegal because of structural changes in the market clears the way for disapproval of similar acquisitions involving similar market shares. In more narrowly defined markets, the proposed standard would make mergers between competitors of minor significance inherently suspect.

As a practical matter, the proposed rule against horizontal acquisitions will close the most readily available and beneficial merger route for many smaller businesses. Their only alternative will be to build through internal expansion. This creates numerous competitive inequalities. The issue can ultimately become one of being denied adequate opportunities to expand in competition with larger rivals.

Paradoxically, the Government's theory has the capacity to create a special business class deprived of making acquisitions because they lack sufficient economic power. Applying a simplified market shares test in this case will inhibit competitive conditions Congress sought to promote and encourage those it desired to prevent.

ARGUMENT

I.

THE MERGER SHOULD BE VIEWED FROM ITS EFFECTS ON COMPETITION GENERALLY IN LOS ANGELES, INSTEAD OF SOLELY RELYING ON MARKET SHARES OF THE PARTIES AND AGGREGATE SHARES FOR GROUPS OF COMPANIES.

The heart of the Government's theory in this case is that the compilation of statistics on market shares found in the record establishes a presumption that the merger is illegal. To color its position so it may appear more reasonable, the Government seeks to create the image that involved here is the consolidation of great economic power in the hands of a large corporation. With this foundation, it proceeds to dispense itself of the need to demonstrate probable anticompetitive effect, and to disregard substantial evidence in the record demonstrating that the merger will have no harmful result prohibited by the statute. Thus, the Government's primary effort is to shield an unsound case from inquiry regarding market impact, which will expose its weakness.

Part I of our argument will show this is not an action where naked statistical comparisons can be substituted for reliable evidence showing probable anticompetitive impact.

A. The Merger Is Not of Such Size To Be Inherently Suspect Under an Automatic Market Shares Test.

Involved in this action is a horizontal merger of local, largely family-owned companies (Fdgs. 1, 6, R. 3064-3065; Fdg. 12(e), R. 3068; Gov. Br. n. 13, pp. 12-13), holding a small percentage (R. 2787) of a large fragmented market (R. 2156, 3020), in competition with numerous firms of comparable size (R. 2787) and a great many smaller, but extremely vigorous, competitors (R. 1895-1901, 1947-1951). Compared to their large geographic and product market, appellees are relatively small.

The Government relies on previous merger cases before this Court, contending that they point the way toward using a market shares test for holding the merger presumptively illegal. But such reasoning falls of its own weight when this merger is compared to others previously considered by the Court.

Von's was not the market leader before or after the merger (Fdg. 3, R. 3065; Fdg. 50, R. 3080). Von's share of the market after the merger was 7.5 per cent of grocery store sales and 6.9 per cent of food store sales (Fdg. 74, R. 3084-3085), compared to the merged firms' share of 36 per cent in Philadelphia,[1] 29 per cent in Alcoa,[2] and 25 per cent in Continental Can.[3] Furthermore, concentration factors in retail grocery distribution in Los Angeles show a fragmented market quite unlike that in previous merger cases before this Court. In terms of market shares, the two largest concerns in Los Angeles held only 15.5 per cent of grocery store sales and 14.3 per cent of food store sales after the merger (Fdg. 74, R. 3084-3085). Whereas, the top two competitors held 58 per cent in Philadelphia, and 52 per cent in both Alcoa and Continental Can. And, further emphasizing the differences involved, the company in Los Angeles with the largest percentage of the market (Safeway) suffered a market share decrease from 14.2 per cent to 7.7 per cent from 1948 to 1960 (R. 2787). Following the merger, Von's had approximately a 1 per cent greater market share over its nearest smaller competitor (R. 2787). In Philadelphia, the comparable figure was 14 per cent, in Alcoa it was 6 per cent, and in Continental Can 14 per cent.

The Government makes much of the fact that the top 20 retailers held between 54 per cent and 57 per cent of the Los Angeles Market. In Philadelphia, five banks held 82 per cent of the market; in Alcoa eight firms had 96 per cent of the market, and in Continental Can five companies possessed 70 per cent of the market.

With respect to Brown Shoe, the acquired firm was "the largest family-style shoe store chain in the United States," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 303 (1962), whereas Shopping Bag was small in the national market, and held only 4.2 per cent of grocery store sales and 3.8 per cent of food store sales in Los Angeles (R. 2787). It's earnings and profits were declining, and it suffered from a shortage of qualified executive personnel (Fdg. 12, R. 3066-3068).

Brown Shoe was both the fourth largest shoe manufacturer, and the third largest seller of shoes by dollar volume in the country. Brown was a "moving factor" in a trend among shoe manufacturers to acquire retail outlets. Prior to the merger, it acquired the Nation's largest operator of leased shoe departments. Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 297, 301-303). Von's is certainly not in this class. And, as the Government admits, Von's and Shopping Bag achieved their present size through internal expansion (Gov. Br. p. 4).

The local market share held by both Brown and Kinney was significant primarily because the companies involved had a customer-supplier relationship raising the issue of foreclosure of a share of the market otherwise open to competitors. Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 328-332). "Thus, in this industry, no merger between a manufacturer and an independent retailer could involve a larger potential market foreclosure." Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 331-332). Since the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is a horizontal arrangement, the foreclosure test is literally inapplicable.[4]

The Government's heavy reliance on market shares in this case is misplaced since the market facts shown in the record demonstrate that Von's will not have a decisive advantage over its competitors (R. 1641-1645; Fdg. 82, R. 3088-3089). The 7 per cent of the market held by Von's, relative to 93 per cent held by remaining competitors, is not such as automatically to supply an affirmative answer to the critical question of whether the merger will have a probable effect prohibited by Section 7. If anything, the market shares factor indicates quite the contrary.

A merger having the small proportions shown here cannot be considered as one producing a firm controlling an "undue" percentage share of the Los Angeles market resulting in significant increased concentration. It is well below the line established in Philadelphia and Continental Can. And it does not pose a threat under standards recommended by Kaysen and Turner,[5] Bok[6] and Stigler.[7] In fact under Stigler's rules the merger would be prima facie lawful.[8]

The share of the Los Angeles market held by Von's resulting from the acquisition of Shopping Bag, is not of such dimensions as to warrant application of the rule of presumptive unlawfulness. The burden is on the Government to prove that the merger will create a reasonable probability of substantial lessening of competition, or a tendency to create a monopoly.

B. In the Context of This Case, the Government's Reliance on Concentration as a Criterion Is Unwarranted and Untenable.

The Government's rationale centers around the word "concentration", which it equates with proof of declining competition proscribed by Section 7. There are three difficulties with this. First, evidence in the record undermines the Government's contention that grocery store sales in Los Angeles have become so concentrated in the hands of a few of the largest concerns as to produce the probability of a substantial lessening of competition. Second, the facts in this case do not show a direct relationship between changes in concentration and the likelihood of substantial competitive harm. Third, it has not been established that to whatever extent concentration has developed or is likely to develop, it is of such character and magnitude to bring about a probable substantial lessening of competition.

[6] Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and The Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv L Rev 226, 308-316 (1960). According to the Government's brief, in 1948 the aggregate market share held by the 8 largest Los Angeles grocery chains was 33.7 per cent (Br. pp. 9, 33); at the time of the merger in 1960 it states this share was 39 per cent (Br. p. 32). "It is true that if the top four, rather than eight, firms were chosen, the increase would be substantially smaller." (Br. n. 37, p. 37). Bok suggests an increase of 7 or 8 per cent as the lower limit of a significant growth in concentration.

[8] Ibid.

Dealing first with what the evidence shows respecting concentration in the relevant market, it appears from the record that there is, at the very least, some uncertainty on this point.

In addition, examination of the record with respect to aggregate shares held by larger firms in the market contradicts the position that increasing concentration has taken place, to the extent that the rule of presumptive unlawfulness is warranted.

Appellees' Exhibit AN (R. 2788) indicates that the percentage of total grocery store sales in the Los Angeles area held by the three largest chains declined from 1952 to 1960. This was also true with respect to the four largest chains, and the five largest chains in the area. The lower court pointed out in its opinion: "In other words, during the period when it is claimed that the competitive situation was deteriorating, single store operators and small chains were beginning, growing, and competing successfully." (R. 3026).

Evidence introduced by the Government also raises substantial doubts that it can successfully predicate its case on increased concentration (R. 3028). Its Exhibit 7 (R. 2331) shows that the four largest Los Angeles chains accounted for a smaller percentage of grocery store sales between 1948 and 1958. And based on 1958 sales of the 20 largest grocery chains, Government's Exhibit 8 (R. 2332) indicates that the combined concentration ratios for all, except the four largest chains, actually decreased over 10 per cent. The record shows no discernible concentration pattern on which a presumption can be made that the statute has been violated.

The Government's proposed theory is also untenable because it is erroneously based on the assertion that concentration in Los Angeles mirrors national trends. Such reflection is accurate in that neither in Los Angeles nor nationally is there a threat of oligopoly.

The Government has perceived some basic economic facts regarding the industry. Throughout its brief, it has indicated an awareness of its competitive health calling attention that it:

> ". . . is . . . a traditional bastion of the small businessman." (Gov. Br. p. 15)
> * * *
> ". . . remains an industry where large firms are not yet dominant and the opportunities of individual entrepreneurs are substantial. Furthermore, from all indications, its technology is such that, even today, and for the indefinite future, many relatively small firms should be able to thrive." (Gov. Br. p. 16)

With the facts, the Government could not have concluded otherwise than that the industry is highly competitive, that small firms continue to thrive, and that size, however obtained, holds out no guarantee of success, much less dominance.[9] And these conditions are widely recognized.[10] One of the basic reasons for the healthy competitive state of the industry is the ease with which new firms enter the market and thrive.[11] In part, this has been attributable to the increasing success of voluntary and cooperative wholesale groups which provide small entrepreneurs with many advantages available to larger multi-unit operators. Retail members of these groups comprise the fastest growing segment of the industry. Economic Inquiry into Food Marketing (FTC Staff Report), Part I—Concentration and Integration in Retailing, p. 6.

That size is not a determinant of ability to compete is vividly demonstrated in Los Angeles where single store operators and small chains were able "to hold their own in competition with the larger chains." (Gov. Br. p. 16).

There is no basis in this record for assuming a parallel between upward adjustments in concentration

[9] R. 1947-1951.

[10] Such recognition does not always operate to the industry's benefit, as investors may prefer "safer" opportunities. A weekly news magazine recently summarized the industry's prospects, as follows: "Grocery chains—competition remains murderous. Their profit margin of 1.1 per cent is still one of the lowest." Newsweek, January 10, 1966, at p. 48.

[11] Other industry factors enhance free access to the market, such as, absence of a patented technology, lack of secret know-how and no substantial product differentiation. A recent Nielsen survey concluded that national-manufacturer branded products have continued to improve their position in the market. See Supermarket News, November 15, 1965, at p. 1. The vigor of competition in food retailing is also strengthened by the entry and growth of new types of competitors. Fdg. 62, R. 3083 For example it has been estimated that 30,000 convenience stores will be in operation by 1975. See, Supermarket News, February 28, 1966 at p. 21. The entry of so-called discount houses with large food departments is also a new competitive factor. Fdg. 61, R. 3082.

ratios with probable substantial lessening of competition (Fdg. 82, R. 3088-3089). The lower court found that the decline in number of grocery stores was due to evolutionary developments inherent in our society (Fdg. 24, R. 3070-3071). The supermarket revolution developed in response to consumer desires and technological changes.[12] It has no antitrust significance. It cannot be assumed that Congress intended Section 7 to obstruct the development of supermarkets.

Where the Government seeks to disparage the intensity of competition, reliance is placed on statistics which fail to support its thesis. For example, it states that between 1948 and 1958 the market share of the 20 largest Los Angeles chains increased from 43.8 per cent to 56.9 per cent.[13] But the bare recital of such figures proves little if anything without further analysis to determine the identity of the component companies. As found by the lower court, "[a]t least seven of the concerns in the top twenty by 1960 were not even in existence as chains (i.e., having more than one store) in 1948." (Fdg. 79, R. 3086-3087). Thus, an attempt is made to prove "concentration" with statistics that are equally susceptible to proof of a competitive market in which smaller operators can achieve success against strong rivals.

The Government places reliance on market share figures for six local markets as evidence of a "rise"

[13] Gov. Br. p. 9 Simultaneously, it attempts to explain away Safeway's decline in market share from 14.2 per cent to 8 per cent by a non-recurring decision to dispose of a large number of small stores. Gov. Br. n. 33, p. 34. The supermarket revolution, however, established a general trend toward operation of fewer stores by larger companies. in concentration in the national market Gov. Br. n. 32, p. 33. They show no such thing. The figures cited were for a particular time only, and the record (R. 1658, 1949) is silent on what time period was selected. These data show no trend of any kind. And since retail grocery distribution is marked by incessant change—always in the process of becoming—, the figures for these local areas lack probative value. Market shares are certainly not static.[13a] There is no basis for assuming they are increasing in the absence of evidence to that effect.

The Government's brief (n. 32, p. 33), states that grocery firms with 11 or more stores increased their share of national sales between 1948 and 1958 from 34.5 per cent to around 43 per cent. But, here again anticompetitive effect is not demonstrated since these data do not consider the changing relationship among the market leaders, who they are, or whether a significant proportion of the market share growth is accounted for by new entrants starting with 1 store and growing into the 11 or more class.[14] In light of the record in this case, reliance on increased concentration by means of such statistics proves nothing.

By centering attention on market share figures, while declining to attach commensurate importance to [14] A recent study, using a "survivor technique", indicates that there is an inverse correlation between sales growth and size of operators with 4 or more stores. See, Gould, The Relation of Sales Growth to the Size of Multi-Store Food Retailers, (1966). Using another system of analysis, he arrives at the opposite conclusion from that urged by the Government. The logical conclusion may be that, as a general proposition, size alone has no relation whatever to competitive success in retail grocery distribution.

qualitative market facts in the record, the Government is asking that meaningful evidence of competitive impact be treated with indifference. This results in obfuscating analysis and creates a false competitive picture.[15]

Of special significance in this case is that the policy of the law favors "retaining 'local control' over industry". Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 316). "Taken as a whole, the legislative history illuminates congressional concern with protection of competition, not competitors, and its desire to restrain mergers only to the extent that such combinations may tend to lessen competition." Id. at 320.

Seizing on the additional share of the market acquired by Von's while giving, at the most, perfunctory attention to the strength of remaining competition, the low entry barriers encouraging unborn competition, and the growth of new forms of competition shown to exist in Los Angeles result in erroneous conclusions.

C. The Proper Antitrust Yardsticks in This Case Require a Probative Analysis of the Market's Competitive Environment.

The structure of the market, as well as the competitive relationship of Von's and Shopping Bag, are relevant factors for consideration. But, against the particular background in this case, whether the merger will result in probable anticompetitive effects prohibited by Section 7 cannot be judged without examination of competitive conditions in the market involved.

---

[15] "Therefore, the traditional view that the local-market industries are essentially competitive in character is probably correct, even though unconcentrated structure is not to be ascribed to them universally." Kaysen and Turner, supra at 40.

With a merger of the small proportions shown here, the decision called for by the statute should rest on realities, not abstractions. An empirical appraisal is necessary if an acquisition outside the ambit of the statute is not to be condemned. In the world of anti-trust little things can mean a lot.

This is not to say that an unlimited range of economic inquiry is required. But more than theoretical or superficial answers should be given to the questions—who may be injured by the merger, what injury will occur, where will it develop, and how significant will it be.

It is not an answer that Von's and Shopping Bag were among a dozen or more leading chains of supermarkets in the Los Angeles area. And the pre-merger market share of 4.7 per cent for Von's and 4.2 per cent for Shopping Bag requires that a broad, rather than narrow, inquiry of its economic effects is needed.

The market in which Von's and Shopping Bag operate experienced a normal—nation-wide—structural evolution toward supermarkets generating fewer and larger stores. Nothing shown here provides a basis for raising a presumption of illegality which depends on disregarding acknowledged conditions fostering competition that are applicable in this case, e.g., the industry nationally and the market involved are not dominated by a few leaders, the merging companies are local operators and possessed a relatively small share of the market, remaining competition from both larger and smaller concerns is vigorous, and there is remarkably easy access to the market with new competition developing (Gov. Br. pp. 15-16, 27, 31, 40-42).

The Government's theory fails to concern itself with a realistic appraisal of the impact of the merger on competition in the relevant market. Instead, it relies upon speculative hypotheses which it does not support on the basis of actual competitive conditions. In the trial of the case, the Government offered little of value showing the probable effects of the merger on market behavior, prices, cost of operation, ability of small firms to compete, entry of potential competition, strength of remaining competition, freedom to use advanced technologies, opportunities for innovation, significance of consumer preferences and other variables that are important.

Reliance on published market price surveys to infer oligopolistic tendencies is unrealistic. Such surveys are characteristic of fragmented highly competitive markets. It is when a market becomes oligopolistic, that price checking by such means becomes unnecessary because of general knowledge of the leaders' prices.

The Government assumes, entirely on the basis of a strict mechanical formula, that the merger is likely to lessen competition substantially. It seeks to impose a rule of general application in grocery retailing based on the size and relationship of the merging firms and changes in market shares.

Trouble arises because this concept is in direct conflict with reality. Such a narrow test—as the Government proposes—is based on a small body of facts isolated from their practical importance in the market.

This illustrates the hazards of reliance on a generalized formula for applying the sanctions of the law in this case. Mechanistic application of announced principles by syllogistic reasoning sometimes involves the process of inferring the desired result from an assumed premise. Facts tend to become subjugated to the purpose of drawing a parallel, which is what the Goverment has done here. Judging the validity of its conclusion that the merger violates Section 7 requires independent evaluation of its premise.

By creating and then invoking a novel arbitrary test, the Government not only seeks to avoid the need to adduce convincing evidence showing that smaller firms will be at a decisive disadvantage because of the merger, but also disregards abundant evidence establishing the contrary. The vigorous and growing strength of remaining competition in the market—attested by numerous findings of fact by the trial court (Fdgs. 28-38, R. 3072-3076; Fdgs. 43-52, R. 3077-3080; Fdg. 82, R. 3088-3089), is considered unimportant under the Government's theory.

As this Court observed in Times-Picayune: "[N]o magic inheres in numbers; 'the relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which the factor is placed.' "[16]

Since the application of Section 7 to a merger of retail grocery distributors raises questions of first impression before this Court, it is particularly important that careful attention be given to the validity of the Government's hypothesis that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag should be decided on the basis of market share figures. It is a matter of no small importance that if this theory is correct, many horizontal mergers by retail operators having little or no adverse competitive impact (as well as those actually strengthening competition) will suddenly become suspect, if not automatically invalid.

II.

THE GOVERNMENT'S MAJOR RELIANCE ON THE MARKET POSITION AND COMPETITIVE RELATION OF VON'S AND SHOPPING BAG CONTRAVENES THE LEGISLATIVE PURPOSE, TERMS AND PROPER APPLICATION OF SECTION 7.

As established by this Court's analysis in the 1962 Brown Shoe opinion, Congress in amending Section 7 of the Clayton Act in 1950, broadened its focus particularly with respect to horizontal acquisitions:

> "Where the arrangement effects a horizontal merger between companies occupying the same product and geographic market, whatever competition previously may have existed in that market between the parties to the merger is eliminated. Section 7 of the Clayton Act, prior to its amendment, focused upon this aspect of horizontal combinations by proscribing acquisitions which might result in a lessening of competition between the acquiring and the acquired companies. The 1950 amendments made plain Congress' intent that the validity of such combinations was to be gauged on a broader scale: their effect on competition generally in an economically significant market." Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 335).

The Government's reasoning in this case rests on a premise that in a relatively decentralized market a combination of local supermarket firms holding a small share of the same market, faced with vigorous competition from firms of all sizes, should be presumed illegal under Section 7 largely because of the competitive relation and market position of the merging firms.

This is a strange rule to apply in retail grocery distribution which admittedly is not dominated by any company, and where small firms in many local markets have demonstrated their viability resulting in relatively low concentration. But wholly aside from this issue, we submit that the Government's theory in this case is not warranted by the facts and not in accordance with the law.

A. One Legislative Purpose of Section 7, as Amended in 1950, Was To Broaden the Area of Inquiry and Focus Attention on the Probable Effects of the Merger on Competition Generally in the Relevant Market.

As originally enacted, Section 7 of the Clayton Act of 1914 provided three tests of violation: (1) substantial lessening of competition between the acquiring and the acquired corporations; (2) restraining commerce in any section or community; and (3) tending to create a monopoly. 38 Stat. 731. The 1950 amendments to Section 7, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. § 18, removed the first test and substantially altered the second, so the statute now provides two standards: (1) substantial lessening of competition in any section of the country; (2) tending to create a monopoly. Section 7 was of course designed to arrest its prohibited effects in their incipiency. Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 317).

By deleting the "acquiring-acquired" test and the term "community" in the original text, Congress plainly broadened the scale for determining where there is reasonable probability that a horizontal acquisition will have the prohibited effects of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly.

The legislative history of the 1950 amendments amply support this view. "It is expected that, in the administration of the act, full consideration will be given to all matters bearing upon the maintenance of competition, including circumstances giving rise to the acquisition." S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1950).

Prominent proponents of the legislation urged this result. Senator Kefauver, one of the Act's sponsors, stated that the mere elimination of competition between the merged firms would not make the acquisition illegal. "[T]he merger would have to have the effect of lessening competition generally." 96 Cong. Rec. 16456 (1950). And at public hearings on earlier proposed legislation dealing with the subject, Congressman Clifford Case raised the objection that horizontal asset acquisitions would be illegal, if subject to the "acquiring-acquired" test, even though they invigorated competition. Hearings on HR 515, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. 23 (1947). During consideration of the legislation, repeated serious concern was raised about the danger of prohibiting horizontal mergers which afford greater competition to larger companies, and it was pointed out that the 1914 test based on competition between the acquiring and acquired companies was more restrictive than is now provided in the statute. HR Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 6-7 (1949). The legislative history of the 1950 amendments is particularly significant in this case, because of the attention given to benefits of competition which result from building up the competitive ability of small or local enterprise. See, e.g., 95 Cong. Rec. 11488 (1949); 96 Cong. Rec. 16435-16436 (1950).

Another change in Section 7, as enacted in 1950, which had the same general effect of broadening the injury standard, was deletion of the term "community". 96 Cong. Rec. 16456 (1950). Proposed amendments as originally introduced retained the 1914 test in this respect, which would have been violated if competition was substantially lessened "in any community" of the country. Use of the word "community" raised a storm of protest, again for the reason that it could be used to prevent local businesses from improving their competitive position through horizontal mergers. S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 4 (1950). As this Court observed in Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 319), Congress sought to attack mergers having demonstrable anticompetitive effects recognizing that some mergers may stimulate competition. "The deletion of the word 'community' in the original Act's description of the relevant geographic market is another illustration of Congress' desire to indicate that its concern was with the adverse effects of a given merger on competition only in an economically significant 'section' of the country. Taken as a whole, the legislative history illuminates congressional concern with the protection of competition, not competitors, and its desire to restrain mergers only to the extent that such combinations may tend to lessen competition." Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 320).

It is clearly a factor of special importance in this case that in approving the 1950 amendments to Section 7, Congress was concerned with the excessive sweep of the earlier statute because of the injury test applicable to horizontal mergers. Attention was directed to the fact that this type of acquisition had special importance for local businesses desiring to build up their competitive strength.

The purpose of the 1950 amendments was to assure a broader construction of the more fundamental provisions of the section that were retained. As one commentator stated:

> "The removal of the acquiring-acquired test and these clear statements of Congressional intent regarding the meaning of the phrase 'in any line of commerce in any section of the country' reveal clearly that one of the most important implications of the 1950 amendments of Section 7 is a complete change in the direction in which the commission and the courts must look for the effect of an acquisition. Under the new law, the investigation must center on a market, in the economic sense, rather than on the relationship between the acquiring and the acquired firms."[17]

Congress in amending Section 7 did more than close a loophole in the law. It also created "a new statutory formula for determining the legality of mergers".[18]

B. The Terms of Section 7, as Amended, Do Not Support the Government's Theory That the Instant Merger Is Illegal Because of the Size and Competitive Relationship of the Merging Firms.

One obvious difficulty with the Government's rationale in this case is the broad and general language of the statute. It speaks in terms of the effect of the acquisition "in any line of commerce in any section of the country". It deals with reasonably probable substantial lessening of competition, or tendency to create a monopoly. It does not approve or suggest any particular formula for analyzing the effects of a merger. Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 321).

[18] Bok, supra at 306.

If Congress intended otherwise and desired to impose some strict market shares rule of presumptive illegality, it had opportunity to do so. The fact is, however, that it rejected several proposals which would have taken a similar approach.[19]

Congress declined to make the difficult selection of a precise formula, the application of which would readily compartmentalize every case on the basis of a few simple facts. It left to the courts and the Federal Trade Commission the major responsibility for accommodating the interdependent concerns of preventing mergers which may substantially injure competition, while allowing legitimate and desirable mergers that have no such effect. "[M]any mergers are neutral with respect to competition, and some may promote efficiency or increase competition, or both."[20] And the mere possibility of a prohibited restraint or tendency to monopoly will not establish the statutory requirement. United States v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 598 (1957).

One of the dominant themes in this Court's Brown Shoe opinion is that the statute calls for an examination beyond market shares to determine its application in complex cases.[21] The proper test of illegality has been held to involve "the necessity for 'consideration not merely of the competition between the two companies, but also the competitive situation of the industry.'" American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 259 F. 2d 524, 527 (CA 2d Cir., 1958).

C. The Proper Application of Section 7 in This Case Does Not Rest on a Test Involving Competition between the Merging Firms, or Their Share of the Relevant Market.

In tracing the legislative history of the amendments to Section 7 adopted in 1950, this Court observed in Brown Shoe that Congress provided "no definite quantitative or qualitative tests by which enforcement agencies could gauge the effects of a given merger to determine whether it may 'substantially' lessen competition or tend toward monopoly". Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 321).

None of the indicia of an inherently suspect merger dealing with market power and concentration is present in this case, and in any event the record clearly establishes that the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag is not likely to have the anticompetitive effects prohibited by the statute. As has been shown in this argument, the facts with respect to the instant merger are in no sense similar, or even comparable, with those in Philadelphia National Bank (pp. 9-10, supra).

The merger of Von's and Shopping Bag should not be presumed illegal according to any so-called simplified standard. The burden is on the Government to prove that it will create a reasonable probability of a substantial lessening of competition, or a tendency to create a monopoly. This determination, if made, should rest on the merger's effects on competition generally in the relevant market.

A quantitative measure of competition between Von's and Shoping Bag, and of Von's market share following the acquisition does not provide the answer to the merger's impact on competitive conditions in the market. "For Section 7 cannot be satisfied by a mere showing that the merging companies do a large dollar volume of business." U. S. Atty. Gen. Nat. Comm. to Study the Antitrust Law, Report 122. Factors involving the size of the merging firms or the firm created by the merger cannot be judged without considering the setting within which the acquisition took place. The issue is whether the effect of the acquisition may be "substantially" to lessen competition. And Congress did not "adopt a definition of the word 'substantially,' whether in quantitative terms of sales or assets or market shares or in designated qualitative terms, by which a merger's effects on competition were to be measured." Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 321).

The general language of the statutory standard applicable "reflects a conscious avoidance of exclusively mathematical tests". Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. n. 36 at 321). Manifestly, the Government's attempt to measure the effects of the instant merger in terms of a rigid static mold which gives no consideration to variables in the market setting is untenable.

The merger involved here, like all horizontal acquisitions, necessarily resulted in bringing together the sales volume of the merging firms. An increase in the market share of the resulting firm almost certainly develops as a natural outgrowth. But not all horizontal mergers are outlawed; only those which have a probability of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly are prohibited. The law was not intended to prohibit all acquisitions among competitors. HR Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 11 (1949).

The competitive impact of the instant merger cannot be ascertained simply by measuring the volume of business done by Von's and Shopping Bag before the merger, or computing the increase in market share held by Von's after the merger.

III.

THE GOVERNMENT'S MECHANICAL TEST HOLDING HORIZONTAL GROCERY MERGERS PRESUMPTIVELY UNLAWFUL DEFEATS ANTITRUST POLICY

A matter of considerable concern is what general effect the Government's theory for outlawing the challenged merger will have on economic concentration in the industry. We submit it will frustrate the purpose of Section 7 by fostering creation of oligopolistic conditions which foreclose local operators from markets otherwise open to them. If allowed to prevail, the Government's policy will tend to change retail grocery distribution from one that is relatively unconcentrated, decentralized and intensely competitive, to one in which large concerns can capture an increasing number of high volume supermarkets.

Horizontal mergers are not the only road which can lead to undesirable economic concentration. There are alternative routes, and anti-merger policy should not be designed or applied in a manner that will have the effect of encouraging undue concentration by other means.

As pointed out previously, the design of the Government in this action is to outlaw horizontal mergers in grocery distribution by means of the most unyielding mechanistic formula. This type of merger is frequently the only kind of acquisition open to a vast majority of retail operators desiring to expand and thereby strengthen their competitive position.

If shares of the relevant market—held by the acquiring and acquired firms, by the new firm, and by remaining competitors—are to raise an automatic presumption of a violation without making an economic appraisal of the merger's likely impact on competition in the market, many retailers will be deprived of an effective means for growth beneficial to competition. Oligopoly, with its attendant adverse effects upon local control which Congress sought to prevent, will be furthered by the Government's standard for judging the merger here involved.

A. The Standard of Presumptive Illegality Based on Changes in Market Structure Provides a Basis for Prohibiting Beneficial Horizontal Mergers Involving Relatively Small Firms.

A merger of two local, largely family-owned concerns, each having approximately 4 per cent of a large metropolitan market which is highly competitive and decentralized, is automatically condemned under the Government's theory in this case. The dangers to which the basis for this judgment leads in invalidating horizontal mergers of smaller supermarket operators are readily apparent.

It is evident that the Government is seeking to provide a general guideline for judging horizontal retail mergers in the industry (J.S. p. 11). The first element of its test of presumptive illegality, namely a market "threatened" with increasing concentration

(Gov. Br. p. 25), can be met by showing a structural change in the relevant market toward fewer and larger outlets. This is characteristic of almost every local market area, since, as the Government points out, the number of grocery stores has declined in recent years, with the growth of the supermarket method of food retailing (Gov. Br. p. 15). Consequently the average sales size, and hence market share, of those stores remaining have increased. Thus, under this standard, the Government could establish at least half its case against a vast range of horizontal mergers where no conceivable injury to competition could result.

Simplified to its essential meaning, the second and final element of the proposed standard requires demonstrating that "the merger thus reduces the number of significant competitors in the market and enhances the market position of those that remain" (Gov. Br. p. 26). Here again a simple structural change is the key. Such a change in market structure is inherent in any horizontal merger, except one of de minimis proportions where the acquired firm may be considered an unimportant competitive factor. What the Government is really seeking is wide discretionary authority for condemning virtually any significant horizontal merger involving grocery stores without bothering to weigh its actual and potential impact on the strength of competition in the market affected.

But aside from this sweeping aspect of the Government's theory, other considerations bring it into conflict with "Congress' desire to promote competition through the protection of viable, small, locally owned businesses." Brown Shoe, supra (370 U.S. at 344). Commercial realities warrant the inference that there may be local markets with greater structural concentration than exists in Los Angeles. And it would not be surprising to find this condition particularly in markets and submarkets of considerably smaller population and area size, where independent and local operators have been able to prosper by aggressive competition.[22]

If the acquisition of a local distributor the size of Shopping Bag, holding only 4.2 per cent of the sales of such a vast, highly decentralized and competitive market as Los Angeles, can produce prohibited structural changes under the Government's test, it could easily apply with the same harsh result against benign and even beneficial mergers by smaller operators in smaller markets and submarkets.

In retail distribution, convenience of location has the effect of localizing competition. And, as this Court observed in Philadelphia National Bank, supra (374 U.S. at 357), the appropriate geographic market may be determined, not with relation to "where the parties to the merger do business or even where they compete, but where, within the area of competitive overlap, the effect of the merger on competition will be direct and immediate."

The selection of the relevant geographic market, or submarket, governs the extent to which changes in market share, market rank, market gap and concentration ratios are measured and observed. The size of the market in terms of area, population and sales can have a pronounced effect in determining the thrust of a horizontal merger, most especially in terms of structural changes. In Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville [22] See Kaysen and Turner, supra at 40. And consult note 15, supra.

Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320 (1961), this Court recognized that as the pie is sliced more thinly, measuring the prospect of injury by means of a purely quantitative test necessarily results in a greater comparative effect.

These considerations prompt the view that if the Government's standard for judging horizontal mergers is upheld, it will have achieved an unsurpassed latitude for condemning acquisitions in grocery distribution, including those which clearly invigorate competition. If the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, achieving 7 per cent of sales in the relevant market is held illegal, it could well require disapproval of future merger efforts by smaller retailers resulting in similar market shares.

B. The Government's Standard for Proscribing Horizontal Mergers Will Penalize Many Relatively Small Operators.

The rule of presumptive unlawfulness, based entirely on structural changes in the market, will require many relatively small retailers to rely on competitive internal growth as the only safe and dependable means of expansion, in keeping pace with the market they serve. As we have pointed out, expansion through the merger route will become dangerous for a large number of retail operators under the arbitrary strictures sought to be applied here. And since a majority of retailers lack sufficient resources for prolonged litigation, even the prospect of an attack would dissuade them from going ahead. In practical effect, many small and medium size enterprises would suffer the considerable disadvantage of being forced to build rather than buy added facilities.

It is not a sophism to suggest that the backlash effect of the Government's theory in this case would create inequalities leading to substantial competitive problems for numerous independent retailers. Some of these effects would be indirect, but nevertheless real.

Bok summarized many of the factors involved as follows:

> "The advantages of buying over building are, however, numerous. For one thing, new facilities can be purchased more quickly than they can be built. In the second place, since the securities of the acquired firm are frequently selling below the replacement cost of its assets, it is often cheaper to buy. Third, the purchase of another firm may bring specialized know-how or managerial ability (though in reality this argument is but a variant of its predecessor since talent of this sort could presumably be 'bought' at some price). Fourth, buying an existing firm provides a certain security, in that it may assure the acquiring firm of products that have already proved themselves in the market. Finally, an acquisition can sometimes be financed more easily than new construction, since stockholders of the acquired firm may be more willing to accept shares of the acquiring company than investors would be to take such shares at a public distribution. Thus, the expenses and risks connected with building are no mere trifles. In some cases, they may loom large enough to cause a firm to abandon expansion plans if merging is blocked; this is particularly likely where the anticipated benefits from expansion are not great. On the other hand, it is also true that the largest firm in the market will usually be as able as any to surmount these difficulties and to expand by internal growth if expansion promises in fact to be profitable."[23] (Emphasis added)

[23] Bok, supra at 302-303.

Underlying all these disadvantages is the fact that smaller concerns lack the leverage of money, and are less able to secure adequate growth capital in competition with larger rivals. And the Government acknowledges that the capital requirements for opening a new supermarket are a significant competitive factor (Gov. Br. pp. 40-41).

To whatever extent this is manifested in blocking the development of such enterprises, or making the process more costly and slower, the issue becomes not one of being forced to build, but being denied adequate opportunity to expand in competition with more opulent rivals. The question here is not one of private interests, but rather the public interest in preventing malignant competitive effects. From this point of view, the Government's proposed standard is so expansive and so rigid as to create a substantial risk that it will make the statute self-defeating. In sum, the Government's simplified test does violence to the Congressional objective embodied in Section 7.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

No. 303

v.

VON'S GROCERY COMPANY AND SHOPPING BAG FOOD STORES

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

A brief reply is necessary to two new issues which appellees' brief has injected into this case.

I. Appellees rely extensively (e.g., Br. 24–25) on articles in trade papers and other extra-record sources for the proposition that competitive conditions were unchanged after the merger. These sources give an incomplete and one-sided version of events in the relevant market since the merger.

(1) Substantial merger activity has continued unabated. Between 1961 and 1964, 14 independent supermarket operators and small chains located in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, with aggregate sales at the time of merger of almost $84 million, were acquired by the area's major chains (Appendix, infra, p. 5).

(2) The market share of the leading chains has continued to increase. Between 1958 and 1963,[1] the share of sales held by the 4 largest firms in Los Angeles County [2] rose from 24.6 to 30.3 percent, the share of the top 8 rose from 39.6 to 43.1 percent, and the share of the 20 largest rose from 54.8 to 60.5 percent.

(3) The number of grocery companies in the Los Angeles metropolitan area has continued to decline. There were 4,000 at the time of the merger in 1960 (Fdg. 73, R. 3084); three years later there were only 3,475 (1963 Census of Business, Retail Trade (BC63-RS4) (table captioned "Single Units and Multi-units").

In short, the structure of the relevant market has continued to deteriorate since the challenged merger.

[1] These statistics are from a Special Tabulation prepared by the Census Bureau on the basis of the 1963 Census of Business, and have only recently become available.

[2] Prior to 1963, the Census Bureau combined Orange and Los Angeles Counties to form the Los Angeles standard metropolitan statistical area. Beginning with the 1963 Census of Business, the Bureau provides statistics separately for each county. Since grocery sales in Los Angeles are 9 times as great as in Orange County, figures for Los Angeles County give a good indication of the picture throughout the metropolitan area. In fact, concentration figures for Los Angeles County, if anything, understate concentration on an area basis, since the grocery trade in Orange County is more highly concentrated. There, in 1963, the market share of the 4 leading chains was 43.2 percent. We note that the Special Tabulation shows a slight decline in the share of the 4 and 8 leading chains in Orange County between 1958 and 1963. The share of the 4 largest declined from 47.1 to 43.2 percent, and that of the 8 largest from 63 to 61.8 percent. (The 20 largest, however, increased their share from 77.2 to 79.6 percent.) In view of the smallness of the declines, the very high concentration levels even after the declines, and the fact that Orange County represents only 10 percent of the sales of the metropolitan area, we attach no significance to the declines.

The market may still be competitive. But the trend is clearly toward excessive concentration. Appellees err in suggesting that events since the merger prove there is no such trend.

2. In support of their argument that the Los Angeles retail grocery market is not, as we argue, threatened by concentration, appellees twice state (Br. 7, 12) that at the time of the challenged merger this market was atomistic under the test propounded in Kaysen and Turner, Antitrust Policy (1959). They have misread this work.

The language appellees quote defines a "loose oligopoly" as (p. 72) "a small number (less than twenty) of firms supplying 75 percent of the market, with no one supplying more than 10–15 percent and a fringe of smaller firms supplying the rest." In so defining "loose oligopoly", the authors do not suggest that any less concentrated market is atomistic. On the contrary, they adopt as the dividing point between oligopolistic and non-oligopolistic markets "a market share of one third of total market sales for the eight largest sellers" (p. 27). They then break down the oligopolistic sector into "Type I" and "Type II" oligopolies, and they define a Type II oligopoly as one where "[t]he first eight firms make 33 percent or more of the shipments, and the first twenty make less than 75 percent of the shipments" (p. 30). Under this test, the retail sale of grocery products in the Los Angeles metropolitan area was, on the eve of the merger, not an unconcentrated or atomistic market but a Type II oligopoly, since, all agree, the eight largest sellers had substantially more than one third of the market's total sales (see, e.g., R. 3023). As we point out in our brief (p. 33), Professor Bain would also classify the relevant market in this case as oligopolistic. See Bain, Industrial Organization (1959), pp. 32–33, 131–132.

Appellees evidently consider Kaysen and Turner's Antitrust Policy an authoritative work which represents a consensus of legal and economic thinking (see Br. 12n.). If so, they must agree that, on the eve of the merger of Von's and Shopping Bag, the relevant market was clearly threatened by undue concentration. In such a market setting, we submit, a merger that unites two of the handful of leading sellers is a matter of serious concern.[8]

Respectfully submitted.

[8] Antitrust Policy also refutes appellees' assertion that "the Los Angeles market is one of the most unconcentrated and fragmented markets in America" (Br. 6). See, e.g., Antitrust Policy, pp. 31–32, 35, 39, and 275 et seq. (statistical appendix).

Another example of misleading quotation occurs on page 10 of appellees' brief, where they quote from Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313, 1317 (1965), as follows: "Widespread prohibition of mergers would impose serious, if not intolerable, burdens upon owners of businesses who wished to liquidate their holdings for irreproachable personal reasons. Moreover, economic welfare is significantly served by maintaining a good market for capital assets. * * *" As the context makes clear (see 78 Harv. L. Rev., pp. 1320-1322), the author was not advocating a relaxation of legal standards for testing horizontal mergers. Rather, "realizing that there are strong reasons for not interpreting the law so broadly as to limit unduly the number of potential purchasers of capital assets, we must recognize that the legal standards for various classes of mergers are interdependent. We cannot decide how far to go in prohibiting one kind of merger without having some idea of how far we have gone or should go with regard to the others." (P. 1320.) The author's conclusion was that the strictest rules should be reserved for horizontal mergers—like that at bar. (P. 1322.)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 303.—October Term, 1965.

United States, Appellant, v. Von's Grocery Company et al.	On Appeal From the United States District Court for the Southern District of California.

[May 31, 1966.]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

On March 25, 1960, the United States brought this action charging that the acquisition by Von's Grocery Company of its direct competitor Shopping Bag Food Stores, both large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, California, violated § 7 of the Clayton Act which, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Bill, provides in relevant part as follows:

> "No corporation engaged in commerce . . . shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." [1]

On March 28, 1960, three days later, the District Court refused to grant the Government's motion for a temporary restraining order and immediately Von's took over all of Shopping Bag's capital stock and assets including 36 grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. After hearing evidence on both sides, the District Court made findings of fact and concluded as a matter of law that there was "not a reasonable probability" that the merger would tend "substantially to lessen competition" or "create a monopoly" in violation of § 7. For this reason the District Court entered judgment for the defendants. 233 F. Supp. 976, 985. The Government appealed directly to this Court as authorized by § 2 of the Expediting Act.[2] The sole question here is whether the District Court properly concluded on the facts before it that the Government had failed to prove a violation of § 7.

The record shows the following facts relevant to our decision. The market involved here is the retail grocery market in the Los Angeles area. In 1958 Von's retail sales ranked third in the area and Shopping Bag's ranked sixth. In 1960 their sales together were 7.5% of the total two and one-half billion dollars of retail groceries sold in the Los Angeles market each year. For many years before the merger both companies had enjoyed great success as rapidly growing companies. From 1948 to 1958 the number of Von's stores in the Los Angeles area practically doubled from 14 to 27, while at the same time the number of Shopping Bag's stores jumped from 15 to 34. During that same decade, Von's sales increased fourfold and its share of the market almost doubled while Shopping Bag's sales multiplied seven times and its share of the market tripled. The merger of these two highly successful, expanding and aggressive competitors created the second largest grocery chain in Los Angeles with sales of almost $172,488,000 annually. In addition the findings of the District Court show that the number of owners operating a single store in the Los Angeles retail grocery market decreased from 5,365 in 1950 to 3,818 in 1961. By 1963, three years after the merger, the number of single-store owners had dropped still further to 3,590.[3] During roughly the same period from 1953 to 1962 the number of chains with two or more

[2] 62 Stat. 989; 15 U. S. C. § 29 (1963 ed.).

[3] Despite this steadfast concentration of the Los Angeles grocery business into fewer and fewer hands, the District Court, in Finding of Fact No. 80, concluded as follows:

"There has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last grocery stores increased from 96 to 150. While the grocery business was being concentrated into the hands of fewer and fewer owners, the small companies were continually being absorbed by the larger firms through mergers. According to an exhibit prepared by one of the Government's expert witnesses, in the period from 1949 to 1958 nine of the top 20 chains acquired 126 stores from their smaller competitors.[4] Figures of a principal defense witness, set out below, illustrate the many acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles grocery industry from 1953 through 1961 including acquisitions made by Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and Mayfair, all among the 10 leading chains in the area.[5] Moreover, a table prepared by the Federal Trade Commission appearing in the Government's reply brief, but not a part of the record here, shows that acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles retail grocery market have continued at a rapid rate since the merger.[6] These facts alone are enough to cause us to conclude contrary to the District Court that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger did violate § 7. Accordingly, we reverse.

decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased . . . ."

This conclusion is completely contradicted by Finding No. 23 which makes plain the steady decline in the number of individual grocery store owners referred to above. It is thus apparent that the District Court, in finding No. 80, used the term "concentration" in some sense other than a total decrease in the number of separate competitors which is the crucial point here.

[4] Appellees, in their brief, claim that 120 and not 126 stores changed hands in these acquisitions:

"It should also be noted here that the exhibit is in error in showing an acquisition by Food Giant from itself of six stores doing an annual volume of $31,700,000. Actually this was simply a change of name by Food Giant . . . ."

[5] These figures as they appear in a table in the Brief for the United States show the following acquisitions of retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area from 1953 to 1961: See Appendix.

From this country's beginning there has been an abiding and widespread fear of the evils which flow from monopoly—that is the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. On the basis of this fear, in 1890, when many of the Nation's industries were already concentrated into what Congress deemed too few hands, it passed the Sherman Act in an attempt to prevent further concentration and to preserve competition among a large number of sellers. Several years later in 1897 this Court emphasized this policy of the Sherman Act by calling attention to the tendency of powerful business combinations to restrain competition "by driving out of business the small dealers and worthy men whose lives have been spent therein, and who might be unable to readjust themselves in their altered surroundings." United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290, 323.[7] The Sherman Act failed to protect the smaller businessmen from elimination through the monopolistic pressures of large combinations which used mergers to grow ever more powerful. As a result in 1914 Congress, viewing mergers as a continuous, pervasive threat to small business, passed § 7 of the Clayton Act which prohibited corporations under most circumstances from merging by purchasing the stock of their competitors. Ingenious businessmen, however, soon found a way to avoid § 7 and corporations began to merge simply by purchasing their rivals' assets. This Court in 1926, over the dissents of Justice Brandeis, Chief Justice Taft, Justices Holmes, and Stone approved [7] Later in 1945 Judge Learned Hand, reviewing the policy of the antitrust laws and other laws designed to foster small business, said, "Throughout the history of these statutes it has been constantly assumed that one of their purposes was to perpetuate and preserve, for its own sake and in spite of possible cost, an organization of industry in small units which can effectively compete with each other." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 429.

this device for avoiding § 7 [8] and mergers continued to concentrate economic power into fewer and fewer hands until 1950 when Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Bill now before us.

Like the Sherman Act in 1890 and the Clayton Act in 1914, the basic purpose of the 1950 Celler-Kefauver Bill was to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business.[9] In stating the purposes of the bill, both of its sponsors, Representative Celler and Senator Kefauver, emphasized their fear, widely shared by other members of Congress, that this concentration was rapidly driving the small businessman out of the market.[10] The period from 1940 to 1947, which was at the center of attention throughout the hearings and debates on the Celler-Kefauver bill, had been characterized by a series of mergers between large corporations

[10] Representative Celler, in introducing the bill on the House floor, remarked:

"Small, independent, decentralized business of the kind that built up our country, of the kind that made our country great, first, is fast disappearing, and second, is being made dependent upon monster concentration." 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

Senator Kefauver expressed the same fear on the Senate floor.

"I think that we are approaching a point where a fundamental decision must be made in regard to this problem of economic concentration. Shall we permit the economy of the country to gravitate into the hands of a few corporations . . . ? Or on the other hand are we going to preserve small business, local operations and free enterprise?" 96 Cong. Rec. 16450.

References to a number of other similar remarks by other Congressmen are collected in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 316, n. 28.

and their smaller competitors resulting in the steady erosion of the small independent business in our economy.[11] As we said in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 315, "The dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of the 1950 amendments was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy." To arrest this "rising tide" toward concentration into too few hands and to halt the gradual demise of the small businessman, Congress decided to clamp down with vigor on mergers. It both revitalized § 7 of the Clayton Act by "plugging its loophole" and broadened its scope so as to prohibit not only mergers between competitors, the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly" but to prohibit all mergers having that effect. By using these terms in § 7 which look not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition, Congress sought to preserve competition among many small businesses by arresting a trend toward concentration in its incipiency before that trend developed to the point that a market was left in the grip of a few big companies. Thus, where concentration is gaining momentum in a market, we must be alert to carry out Congress'

[11] H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3, described this characteristic of the merger movement as follows:

". . . the outstanding characteristic of the merger movement has been that of large corporations buying out small companies, rather than smaller companies combining together in order to compete more effectively with their larger rivals. More than 70 percent of the total number of firms acquired during 1940–47 have been absorbed by larger corporations with assets of over $5,000,000. In contrast, fully 93 percent of all the firms bought out held assets of less than $1,000,000. Some 33 of the Nation's 200 largest industrial corporations have bought out an average of 5 companies each, and 13 have purchased more than 10 concerns each."

intent to protect competition against ever increasing concentration through mergers.[12]

The facts of this case present exactly the threatening trend toward concentration which Congress wanted to halt. The number of small grocery companies in the Los Angeles retail grocery market had been declining rapidly before the merger and continued to decline rapidly afterwards. This rapid decline in the number of grocery store owners moved hand in hand with a large number of significant absorptions of the small companies by the larger ones. In the midst of this steadfast trend toward concentration, Von's and Shopping Bag, two of the most successful and largest companies in the area, jointly owning 66 grocery stores merged to become the second largest chain in Los Angeles. This merger cannot be defended on the ground that one of the companies was about to fail or that the two had to merge to save themselves from destruction by some larger and more powerful competitor.[13] What we have on the contrary is simply the case of two already powerful companies merging in a way which makes them even more powerful than they were before. If ever such a merger would not violate § 7, certainly it does when it takes place in a market characterized by a long and continuous trend toward fewer and fewer owner-competitors which is exactly the sort of trend which Congress, with power to do so, declared must be arrested.

Appellee's primary argument is that the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag is not prohibited by § 7 because the Los Angeles grocery market was competitive before the merger, has been since, and may continue to be in the future. Even so, § 7 "requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their 'incipiency.'" United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U. S., at p. 362. It is enough for us that Congress feared that a market marked at the same time by both a continuous decline in the number of small businesses and a large number of mergers would, slowly but inevitably gravitate from a market of many small competitors to one dominated by one or a few giants, and competition would thereby be destroyed. Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Bill to prevent such a destruction of competition. Our cases since the passage of that bill have faithfully endeavored to enforce this congressional command.[14] We adhere to them now.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 303.—October Term, 1965.

United States, Appellant, v. Von's Grocery Company et al.	On Appeal From the United States District Court for the Southern District of California.

[May 31, 1966.]

Mr. Justice White, concurring.

As I read the Court's opinion, which I join, it does not hold that in any industry exhibiting a decided trend towards concentration, any merger between competing firms violates § 7 unless saved by the failing company doctrine; nor does it declare illegal each and every merger in such an industry where the resulting firm has as much as a 7.5% share of the relevant market. But here, before the merger in 1958, the largest firm had 8% of the sales, Von's was third with 4.7% and Shopping Bag was sixth with 4.2%. The four largest firms had 24.4% of the market, the top eight had 40.9% and the top 12 had 48.8% as compared with 25.9%, 33.7% and 38.8% in 1948. All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10. Further, all but three of the top 10 had increased their market share between 1948 and 1958 and those who gained gained more than the three lost. Also, although three companies declined in market share their total sales increased in substantial amounts.

Given a trend towards fewer and fewer sellers which promises to continue, it is clear to me that where the eight leading firms have over 40% of the market, any merger between the leaders or between one of them and a lesser company is vulnerable under § 7, absent some special proof to the contrary. Here Von's acquired Shopping Bag. Both were among the eight largest companies, both had grown substantially since 1948 and they were substantial competitors. After the merger the four largest firms had 28.8%, the eight largest had 44% and the 12 largest had 50%. The merger not only disposed of a substantial competitor but increased the concentration in the leading firms. In my view the Government made out a prima facie case that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 303.—October Term, 1965.

United States, Appellant, v. Von's Grocery Company et al.	On Appeal From the United States District Court for the Southern District of California.

[May 31, 1966.]

Mr. Justice Stewart, with whom Mr. Justice Harlan joins, dissenting.

We first gave consideration to the 1950 amendment of § 7 of the Clayton Act in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294. The thorough opinion The Chief Justice wrote for the Court in that case made two things plain: First, the standards of § 7 require that every corporate acquisition be judged in the light of the contemporary economic context of its industry.[1] Second, the purpose of § 7 is to protect competition, not to protect competitors, and every § 7 case must be decided in the light of that clear statutory purpose.[2] Today the Court turns its back on these two basic principles and on all the decisions that have followed them.

The Court makes no effort to appraise the competitive effects of this acquisition in terms of the contemporary

[1] "[A] merger had to be functionally viewed, in the context of its particular industry." "[B]oth the Federal Trade Commission and the courts have, in the light of Congress' expressed intent, recognized the relevance and importance of economic data that places any given merger under consideration within an industry framework almost inevitably unique in every case." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S., at 321–322.

[2] "Taken as a whole, the legislative history illuminates congressional concern with protection of competition, not competitors, and its desire to restrain mergers only to the extent that such combinations may tend to lessen competition." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 320.

economy of the retail food industry in the Los Angeles area.[3] Instead, through a simple exercise in sums, it finds that the number of individual competitors in the market has decreased over the years, and, apparently on the theory that the degree of competition is invariably proportional to the number of competitors, it holds that this historic reduction in the number of competing units is enough under § 7 to invalidate a merger within the market, with no need to examine the economic concentration of the market, the level of competition in the market, or the potential adverse effect of the merger on that competition. This startling per se rule is contrary not only to our previous decisions, but contrary to the language of § 7, contrary to the legislative history of the 1950 amendment, and contrary to economic reality.

Under § 7, as amended, a merger can be invalidated if, and only if, "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." No question is raised here as to the tendency of the present merger to create a monopoly. Our sole concern is with the question whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition.

The principal danger against which the 1950 amendment was addressed was the erosion of competition through the cumulative centripetal effect of acquisitions

[3] This is the first case to reach the Court under the 1950 amendment to § 7 that involves a merger between firms engaged solely in retail food distribution. Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 40 (1959), have discussed this industry in the following terms:

"As a guess, we can say that the most important distributive trades, especially the food trades, are structurally unconcentrated in the metropolitan areas . . . . [T]he significance of structural oligopoly in terms of policy is far different in [these trades] than in manufacturing and mining. . . . [T]he traditional view that the local-market industries are essentially competitive in character is probably correct . . . ."

by large corporations, none of which by itself might be sufficient to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Congress' immediate fear was that of large corporations buying out small companies.[4] A major aspect of that fear was the perceived trend toward absentee ownership of local business.[5] Another, more generalized, congressional purpose revealed by the legislative history was to protect small businessmen and to stem the rising tide of concentration in the economy.[6] These goals, Congress thought, could be achieved by "arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 317.

[4] See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3, quoted in footnote 9 of the Court's opinion. Mention of the retail food industry is notably absent in the legislative history. Although it is clear that, in addition to the already highly oligopolized industries, Congress was also concerned with trends toward concentration in industries that were still highly fragmented, this case involves not even a remote approach to the "monster concentration" of which Representative Celler spoke in introducing the 1950 amendment to the House of Representatives. 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

[5] See, e. g., H. R. Hearing on H. R. 2734, p. 12 (remarks of Senator Kefauver).

[6] Much of the fuel for the congressional debates on concentration in the American economy was derived from a contemporary study by the Federal Trade Commission on corporate acquisitions between 1940 and 1947. See Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948). A critical study of the FTC report, published while the 1950 amendment was pending in Congress, concluded that the effect of the recent merger movement on concentration had been slight. Lintner & Butters, Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940–1947, 32 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 30 (1950). Two economists for the Federal Trade Commission later acquiesced in that conclusion. Blair & Houghton, The Lintner-Butters Analysis of the Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940–1947, 33 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 63, 67, n. 12 (1951).

The concept of arresting restraints of trade in their "incipiency" was not an innovation of the 1950 amendment. The notion of incipiency was part of the report on the original Clayton Act by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in 1914, and it was reiterated in the Senate report in 1950.[7] That notion was not left undefined. The legislative history leaves no doubt that the applicable standard for measuring the substantiality of the effect of a merger on competition was that of a "reasonable probability" of lessening competition.[8] The standard was

"Broadly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices which, as a rule, singly and in themselves, are not covered by the Act of July 2, 1890 [the Sherman Act] or other existing antitrust acts, and thus, by making these practices illegal, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and before consummation."

See also S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 4–5: "The intent here, as in other parts of the Clayton Act, is to cope with monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and well before they have attained such effects as would justify a Sherman Act proceeding;" id., p. 6: "The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words ['may be'] is a necessary element in any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act."

Thus, the Senate Reports on both the original Clayton Act and the 1950 amendment carefully delineate the "incipiency" with which the provisions are concerned as that of monopolization or classical restraints of trade under the Sherman Act. The notion that "incipiency" might be expanded to refer also to a lessening of competition first appeared in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 317.

[8] The Senate Report is clear on this point:

"The use of these words ['may be substantially to lessen competition'] means that the bill, if enacted, would not apply to the mere possibility but only to the reasonable probability of the prescribed [sic] effect . . . . The words 'may be' have been in section 7 of thus more stringent than that of a "mere possibility" on the one hand and more lenient than that of a "certainty" on the other.[9] I cannot agree that the retail grocery business in Los Angeles is in an incipient or any other stage of a trend toward a lessening of competition, or that the effective level of concentration in the industry has increased. Moreover, there is no indication that the present merger, or the trend in this industry as a whole, augurs any danger whatsoever for the small businessman. The Court has substituted bare conjecture for the statutory standard of a reasonable probability that competition may be lessened.[10] the Clayton Act since 1914. The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words is a necessary element in any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act." S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 6.

See also 96 Cong. Rec. 16453 (remarks of Senator Kefauver). Cf. 51 Cong. Rec. 14463–14464 (amendment of Senator Reed).

[9] Although Congress eschewed exclusively mathematical tests for assessing the impact of a merger, it offered several generalizations indicative of the sort of merger that might be proscribed, e. g.: Whether the merger eliminated an enterprise that had been a substantial factor in competition; whether the increased size of the acquiring corporation threatened to give it a decisive advantage over competitors; whether an undue number of competing enterprises had been eliminated. H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 321, n. 36. Only the first of these generalizations is arguably applicable to the present merger; the market-extension aspects of the merger, as well as the evidence of Shopping Bag's declining profit margin and weak price competition, suggest that any conclusion under this test would be equivocal. See pp. 15–16, 17, n. 30, infra. Senator Kefauver stated explicitly on the Senate Floor that the mere elimination of competition between the merged firms would not make the acquisition illegal; rather, "the merger would have to have the effect of lessening competition generally." 96 Cong. Rec. 16456.

[10] Eighteen years ago, a dictum in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 46, adverted to a "reasonable possi-

The Court rests its conclusion on the "crucial point" that, in the 11-year period between 1950 and 1961, the number of single-store grocery firms in Los Angeles decreased 29% from 5,365 to 3,818.[11] Such a decline should, of course, be no more than a fact calling for further investigation of the competitive trend in the industry. For the Court, however, that decline is made the end, not the beginning, of the analysis. In the counting-of-heads game played today by the Court, the reduction in the number of single-store operators becomes a yardstick for automatic disposition of cases under § 7.

I believe that even the most superficial analysis of the record makes plain the fallacy of the Court's syllogism that competition is necessarily reduced when the bare bility" as the appropriate standard for the corresponding language ("may be to substantially lessen competition") under § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 14. The dictum provoked a sharp dissent in that case, id., at 55, 57–58, and the Court subsequently withdrew it, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U. S. 293, only to reinstate it again today. This issue, which appeared settled at the time of the 1950 amendment, provoked an acrimonious exchange during the Senate hearings. S. Hearings on H. R. 2734, pp. 160–168.

[11] The decline continued at approximately the same rate to 1963, the last year for which data are available, when there were 3,590 single-story grocery firms in the area. The record contains no breakdown of the figures on single-store concerns. In an extensive study of the retail grocery industry on a national scale, the Federal Trade Commission found that between 1939 and 1954 the total number of grocery stores in the United States declined by 109,000, or 28%. The entire decrease was suffered by stores with annual gross sales of less than $50,000. During the same period, the number of stores in all higher sales brackets increased. The Commission noted that the census figures, from which its data were taken, included an undetermined number of grocery firms liquidating after 1948 that merely closed their grocery operations and continued their remaining lines of business, such as nongrocery retailing, food wholesaling, food manufacturing, etc. Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing 48, 54 (1960).

number of competitors has declined.[12] In any meaningful sense, the structure of the Los Angeles grocery market remains unthreatened by concentration. Local competition is vigorous to a fault, not only among chain stores themselves but also between chain stores and single-store operators. The continuing population explosion of the Los Angeles area, which has outrun the expansion plans of even the largest chains, offers a surfeit of business opportunity for stores of all sizes.[13] Affiliated with cooperatives that give the smallest store the buying strength of its largest competitor, new stores have taken full advantage of the remarkable ease of entry into the market. And, most important of all, the record simply cries out that the numerical decline in the number of single-store owners is the result of transcending social and technological changes that positively preclude the inference that competition has suffered because of the attrition of competitors.

[12] The generalized case against the Court's numerical approach is stated in Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 312, n. 261:

"[T]here are serious problems connected with the use of this yardstick. First, not every firm contributes equally to competition. In particular, there may be a fringe of firms too small to be able to affect price and production policies in the market as a whole. Alternatively, certain firms may be marginal in the sense that their costs and financial situations preclude them from having much, if any, impact on market conditions; indeed they may be able to remain in operation only because excessive profits are being earned by the stronger firms. An [exit] of companies of this sort would have much less significance than a counting of corporate heads would imply."

[13] Between 1953 and 1961, the population of the Los Angeles metropolitan area increased from 4,300,000 to 6,800,000 and the average population per grocery store increased from 695 to 1,439. Additional opportunity for new stores in the area results from the geographical division of the city into numerous suburbs, as well as from the lack of specific store loyalty among new residents.

Section 7 was never intended by Congress for use by the Court as a charter to roll back the supermarket revolution. Yet the Court's opinion is hardly more than a requiem for the so-called "Mom and Pop" grocery stores—the bakery and butcher shops, the vegetable and fish markets—that are now economically and technologically obsolete in many parts of the country. No action by this Court can resurrect the old single-line Los Angeles food stores that have been run over by the automobile or obliterated by the freeway. The transformation of American society since the Second World War has not completely shelved these specialty stores, but it has relegated them to a much less central role in our food economy. Today's dominant enterprise in food retailing is the supermarket. Accessible to the housewife's automobile from a wide radius, it houses under a single roof the entire food requirements of the family. Only through the sort of reactionary philosophy that this Court long ago rejected in the Due Process Clause area can the Court read into the legislative history of § 7 its attempt to make the automobile stand still, to mold the food economy of today into the market pattern of another era.[14]

This is not a case in which the record is equivocal with regard to the status of competition in the industry in question. To the contrary, the record offers abundant [14] Cf. Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U. S. 726. In criticizing a recent decision of the Federal Trade Commission, one commentator has stated, in terms applicable mutatis mutandis to the Court's decision in the present case:

". . . Any child alive in the 1950's could see that a restructuring of food retailing was then going on. The business was adjusting itself, through market mechanisms that included merger, to vast and profound changes in the American way of life. There is not a word in the FTC majority opinion that relates changes in the number of stores and chains to the proliferation of suburbs, the construction of shopping centers, and the final triumph of the supermarket—an innovation in retailing that has since spread across the Western evidence of the dramatic history of growth and prosperity of the retail food business in Los Angeles.

The District Court's finding of fact that there was no increase in market concentration before or after the merger is amply supported by the evidence if concentration is gauged by any measure other than that of a census of the number of competing units. Between 1948 and 1958, the market share of Safeway, the leading grocery chain in Los Angeles, declined from 14% to 8%. The combined market shares of the top two chains declined from 21% to 14% over the same period; for the period 1952–1958, the combined shares of the three, four, world. The most important cause of these changes was the automobile revolution . . . which not even the FTC can stop.

. . . . . .

". . . Plenty of living American men and women remember an era when virtually all groceries were sold through very small stores none of which had 'any significant market share.' Was this era the high point of competition in food retailing? Many little towns had, in fact, only one place where a given kind of food could be bought. In a typical city neighborhood, defined by the range of a housewife's willingness to lug groceries home on foot, there might be three or four relaxed 'competitors.' If she did not like the price or quality offered by them, she could take her black-string market bag, board a trolley car, and try her luck among the relaxed 'competitors' of some other neighborhood." Ways, A New "Worst" in Antitrust, Fortune, April 1966, pp. 111–112.

In the present case, the District Court found that in the era preceding the rise of the supermarkets, "the area from which the typical store drew most of its customers was limited to a block or two in any direction and if a particular grocery store happened to be the only one in its immediate neighborhood, it had a virtual monopoly of local trade." Thus, the Court's aphorism in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U. S. 321, 363—that "[c]ompetition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share"—is peculiarly maladroit in the historic context of the retail food industry. See also Hampe and Wittenberg, The Lifeline of America: Development of the Food Industry 313–372 (1964); Lebhar, Chain Stores in America 1859 to 1962, pp. 348–390 (1963).

and five largest firms also declined. It is true that between 1948 and 1958, the combined shares of the top 20 firms in the market increased from 44% to 57%. The crucial fact here, however, is that seven of these top 20 firms in 1958 were not even in existence as chains in 1948. Because of the substantial turnover in the membership of the top 20 firms, the increase in market share of the top 20 as a group is hardly a reliable indicator of any tendency toward market concentration.[15]

In addition, statistics in the record for the period 1953–1962 strongly suggest that the retail grocery industry in Los Angeles is less concentrated today than it was a decade ago. During this period, the number of chain store firms in the area rose from 96 to 150, or 56%. That increase occurred overwhelmingly among chains of the very smallest size, those composed of two or three grocery stores. Between 1953 and 1962, the number of such "chains" increased from 56 to 104, or 86%. Although chains of 10 or more stores increased from 10 to 24 during the period, seven of these 24 chains were not even in existence as chains in Los Angeles in 1953.[16]

[15] See Joskow, Structural Indicia: Rank-Shift Analysis as a Supplement to Concentration Ratios, 6 Antitrust Bulletin 9 (1961). In addition, the overall market share of the top 20 firms in fact showed a slight decline between 1958 and 1960. The statement in the concurring opinion in the present case, that "All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10," is based on conjecture. The record demonstrates only that the top four firms in 1948 were among the top 10 firms in 1958; the record neither identifies the remaining six of the top 10 firms in 1948 nor charts their subsequent history.

[16] For a similar study of the retail food industry at the national level, see Lebhar, "Small chain virility a bar to monopoly," Chain Store Age, Jan. 1962, p. 20. See also Gould, The Relation of Sales Growth to the Size of Multi-Store Food Retailers 6 (1966) (inverse correlation found between sales growth and size of chains with four or more stores).

Yet even these dramatic statistics do not fully reveal the dynamism and vitality of competition in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles during the period. The record shows that at various times during the period 1953–1962, no less than 269 separate chains were doing business in Los Angeles, of which 208 were two- or three-store chains. During that period, therefore, 173 new chains made their appearance in the market area, and 119 chains went out of existence as chain stores.[17] The vast majority of this market turbulence represented turnover in chains of two or three stores; 143 of the 173 new chains born during the period were chains of this size. Testimony in the record shows that, almost without exception, these new chains were the outgrowth of successful one-store operations.[18] There is no indication

[17] Of these latter 119 chains, 66 went out of business altogether, 28 reduced their operations to a single store, and 25 were eliminated as separate competitors as a result of acquisitions by other chains.

[18] On the basis of these facts, one witness concluded:

"The apparent willingness and ability of grocers to expand and create new chain entities at the staggering rate of more than 17 a year, and the growth potential of new chains, precludes in my opinion the possibility that the retail grocery business in Los Angeles will become either monopolistic or oligopolistic in the foreseeable future. It must be remembered that in 1953, only ten chains with as many as ten stores each were operating in the area. These chains are recognized as being among the best managed, most successful and aggressive supermarket operators in the country. They themselves have engaged in expansion programs of significant proportions since 1953. Yet, 10 years later, instead of having swept aside all competition and being left alone to compete among themselves, these same 10 chains are now faced with the necessity of competing against no less than 14 new chains of 10 or more stores each, a significantly greater number of smaller chains and a host of successful single store operators, of whom many are affiliated with powerful voluntary chains or other cooperative groups . . . . The growth of independents into chains and of small chains into larger ones . . . demonstrates convincingly that small concerns don't have to remain small in Los Angeles."

that comparable turmoil did not equally permeate single-store operations in the area.[19] In fashioning its per se rule, based on the net arithmetical decline in the number of single-store operators, the Court completely disregards the obvious procreative vigor of competition in the market as reflected in the turbulent history of entry and exit of competing small chains.

To support its conclusion the Court invokes three sets of data regarding absorption of smaller firms by merger with larger firms. In each of the acquisitions detailed in footnotes 3 and 4 of the Court's opinion, the acquired units were grocery chains. Not one of these acquisitions was of a firm operating only a single store.[20] The Court cannot have it both ways. It is only among single-store operators that the decline in the unit number of competitors, so heavily relied upon by the Court, has taken place. Yet the tables reproduced in these footnotes show not a trace of merger activity involving the acquisition of single-store operators. And the number of chains in the area has in fact shown a substantial net increase during the period, in spite of the fact that some of the chains have been absorbed by larger firms. How then can the Court rely on these acquisitions as evidence of a tendency toward market concentration in the area?

The Court's use of market acquisition data for the period 1953–1961,[21] prepared by the Government from [19] Data for 1960, the only year for which such figures are available in the record, reveal a comparable agitation of entry and exit among operators of single stores. Although there was a net loss of 132 single outlet stores in 1960, 128 new single outlet stores opened during the year.

[20] As to footnote 3 of the Court's opinion, this fact is obvious on the face of the table. As to footnote 4, examination of the record discloses that each of the nine acquisitions listed as involving a single store represented purchases of single stores from chains ranging in size from two to 49 stores.

[21] See footnote 3 of the Court's opinion.

the work sheets of a defense witness, is also questionable for another reason. During that period, Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and Mayfair were ranked 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, respectively, on the basis of the percentage of their sales in Los Angeles in 1958, so that the impact of their acquisitions, made in the face of competition by the top six chains, is considerably blunted. The remarkable feature disclosed by these data is that none of the top six firms in the area expanded by acquisition during the period.[22]

The Court's reliance on the fact that nine of the top 20 chains acquired 120 stores in the Los Angeles area between 1949 and 1958 does not withstand analysis in light of the complete record. Forty percent of these acquisitions, representing 48 stores with gross sales of more than $71,000,000, were made by Fox, Yor-Way, and McDaniels, which ranked 9th, 11th, and 20th, respectively, according to 1958 sales in the market. Each of these firms subsequently went into bankruptcy as a result of over-expansion, under-capitalization, or inadequate managerial experience. This substantial post-acquisition demise of relatively large chains hardly comports with the Court's tacit portrayal of the inexorable march of the market toward oligopoly.

Further, the table relied on by the Court to sustain its view that acquisitions have continued in the Los Angeles area at a rapid rate in the three-year period following this merger indiscriminately lumps together horizontal and market extension mergers.[23] Only 29 stores, representing 13 acquisitions, were acquired in horizontal mergers, and the record reveals that nine of these 29 stores were acquired in the course of dispositions in bankruptcy. Such acquisitions of failing companies, of course, are immune from the Clayton Act. International Shoe Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 301–303. Thus, at a time when the number of single-store concerns was well over 3,500, horizontal mergers over a three-year period between going concerns achieved at most only the de minimis level of 10 acquisitions involving 20 stores. It cannot seriously be maintained that the effect of the negligible market share foreclosed by these horizontal mergers may be substantially to lessen competition within the meaning of § 7. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 329.

[22] Footnote 3 of the Court's opinion is somewhat misleading in that it weights the data from which it is drawn in favor of the acquisition by grocery chains of other chains consisting of relatively larger numbers of store units. The complete data of the witness included several acquisitions of one- and two-store concerns, together with the disposition of one ten-store chain to various individuals.

The great majority of the post-merger acquisitions detailed in footnote 4 of the Court's opinion, ante, were of the market-extension type, involving neither the elimination of direct competitors in the Los Angeles market nor increased concentration of the market. There are substantial economic distinctions between such market-extension mergers and classical horizontal mergers.[24] Whatever the wisdom or logic of the Court's assumed arithmetic proportion between the number of single-store concerns and the level of competition within the meaning of § 7 as applied to horizontal mergers, it is simply not possible to make the further assumption that the mere occurrence of market extension mergers is adequate to prove a tendency of the local market toward decreased competition.

Moreover, contrary to the assumption on which the Court proceeds, the record establishes that the present merger itself has substantial, even predominant, market-extension overtones. The District Court found that the Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and that the Shopping Bag stores were located in the northern and eastern portions. In each of the areas in which Von's and Shopping Bag stores competed directly, there were also at least six other chain stores and several smaller stores competing for the patronage of customers. On the basis of a "housewife's 10-minute driving time" test conducted for the Justice Department by a government witness, it was shown that slightly more than half of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores were not in a position to compete at all with one another in the market.[25] Even among those stores which competed at least partially with one another, the overlap in sales represented only approximately 25% of the combined sales of the two chains in the overall Los Angeles area. The present merger was thus three parts market-extension and only one part horizontal, but the Court nowhere recognizes this market-extension aspect that exists within the local market itself. The actual market share foreclosed by the elimination of Shopping Bag as an independent competitor was thus slightly less than 1% of the total grocery store sales in the area. The share of the market preempted by the present merger was therefore practically identical with the 0.77% market foreclosure accepted as "quite insubstantial" by the Court in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U. S. 320, 331–333.

The irony of this case is that the Court invokes its sweeping new construction of § 7 to the detriment of a merger between two relatively successful, local, largely family-owned concerns, each of which had less than 5% of the local market and neither of which had any prior history of growth by acquisition.[26] In a sense, the defendants are being punished for the sin of aggressive competition.[27] The Court is inaccurate in its sugges-

[26] At the time of the merger in 1960, Von's operated 28 retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. It commenced operation as a partnership of the Von de Ahe family in 1932, during the depression, with a food concession in a small grocery store. Shopping Bag operated 36 stores in Los Angeles at the time of the merger; it commenced operation as a partnership in a small grocery store in 1930. So far as the record reveals, the competitive behavior of these firms was impeccable throughout their expansion, which took place solely by internal growth. In discussing the success of comparable firms vis-à-vis the Sherman Act, Judge Learned Hand stated, "[T]he Act does not mean to condemn the resultant of those very forces which it is its prime object to foster: finis opus coronat. The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 430.

[27] Nor is it altogether easy to escape the feeling that it is not so much this merger, but Los Angeles itself, that is being invalidated here. Cf. Adelman, Antitrust Problems: The Antimerger Act, 1950–1960, 51 Am. Econ. Rev. 236, 243 (May 1961): "In the antitrust dictionary, 'powerful' has no necessary connection with monopoly power or market control or even market share. It means . . . one four-letter word: size." Los Angeles is, to be sure, a big place. Although Shopping Bag's share of the Los Angeles market was only 4.2%, its sales in 1958 totaled $84,000,000. Compare the Court's statement in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U. S. 320, 333–334:

"It is urged that the present contract pre-empts competition to the extent of purchases worth perhaps $128,000,000, and that this 'is, tions, ante, p. 7, that the merger makes these firms more "powerful" than they were before, and that Shopping Bag was itself a "powerful" competitor at the time of the merger. There is simply no evidence in the record, and the Court makes no attempt to demonstrate, that the increment in market share obtained by the combined stores can be equated with an increase in the market power of the combined firm. And, although Shopping Bag was not a "failing company" within the meaning of our decision in International Shoe Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 301–303, the record at least casts strong doubt on the contention that it was a powerful competitor.[28] The District Court found that Shopping Bag suffered from a lack of qualified executive personnel [29] and that, although overall sales of the chain had been increasing, its earnings and profits were declining.[30] Further, the merger clearly comported with "the

of course, not insignificant or insubstantial.' While $128,000,000 is a considerable sum of money, even in these days, the dollar volume, by itself, is not the test . . . ."

[28] This is not a "merger between two small companies to enable the combination to compete more effectively with larger corporations dominating the relevant market," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 319; cf. H. R. Hearing on H. R. 2734, pp. 40–41; S. Hearings on H. R. 2734, pp. 6, 51; 95 Cong. Rec. 11486, 11488, 11506; 96 Cong. Rec. 16436; H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 6–8; S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 4. However, the Court today in a gratuitous dictum, ante, p. 7, undercuts even that principle by confining it to cases in which competitors are obliged to merge to save themselves from destruction by a larger and more powerful competitor.

[29] Mr. Hayden, the president and principal stockholder of Shopping Bag, was advanced in years and was concerned over the absence of a strong management staff that could take over his responsibilities.

[30] Von's was a considerably more successful competitor than Shopping Bag. Shopping Bag's net income as a percentage of total sales declined from 1.6% in 1957 to 0.9% in 1959, and its net profit as a percentage of total assets declined from 6.6% to 3.2%. During desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry" that the Court noted in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 315–316.

With regard to the "plight" of the small businessman, the record is unequivocal that his competitive position is strong and secure in the Los Angeles retail grocery industry. The most aggressive competitors against the larger retail chains are frequently the operators of single stores.[31] The vitality of these independents is directly attributable to the recent and spectacular growth in California of three large cooperative buying organizations. Membership in these groups is unrestricted; through them, single-store operators are able to purchase their goods at prices competitive with those offered by suppliers even to the largest chains.[32] The rise of these the same period, the net income of Von's increased from 2.1% to 2.3%, and its net profits declined from 12.7% to 10.8%.

[31] One single-store operator, located adjacent to one supermarket and within a mile of two others, testified, "I have often been asked if I could compete successfully against this sort of competition. My answer is and always has been that the question is not whether I can compete against them, but whether they can compete against me."

Another single-store operator testified, "Competition in the grocery business is on a store-by-store basis and any aggressive and able operator like myself can out-compete the store of any of the chains because of personalized service, better labor relations, and being in personal charge of the store and seeing that it is run properly."

A third single-store operator testified, "The chains in this area are good operators, but when they grow too large, they are actually easier to compete with from an independent's viewpoint. If I had a choice, I would rather operate a store near a chain unit than near another independent."

[32] See generally Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing, c. VI, "Retailer-owned Cooperative Food Wholesalers"; c. VII, "Wholesaler-sponsored Voluntary Retail Groups" (1960). The annual sales of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., a retailer-owned cooperative whose members do business principally in the Los Angeles area, rose fourfold from cooperative organizations has introduced a significant new source of countervailing power against the market power of the chain stores, without in any way sacrificing the advantages of independent operation. In the face of the substantial assistance available to independents through membership in such cooperatives, the Court's implicit equation between the market power and the market share resulting from the present merger seems completely invalid.

Moreover, it is clear that there are no substantial barriers to market entry. The record contains references to numerous highly successful instances of entry with modest initial investments. Many of the stores opened by new entrants were obtained through the disposition of unwanted outlets by chains; frequently the new competitors were themselves chain-store executives who had resigned to enter the market on their own. Enhancing free access to the market is the absence of any such restrictive factors as patented technology, trade secrets, or substantial product differentiation.

Numerous other factors attest to the pugnacious level of grocery competition in Los Angeles, all of them silently ignored by the Court in its emphasis solely on the declining number of single-store competitors in the market. 3,590 single-store firms is a lot of grocery stores. The large number of separate competitors and the frequent $87,000,000 in 1948 to $345,000,000 in 1962, and the volume of its purchases exceeded that of all but the largest national chains doing business in Los Angeles. Most of the leading chains in the area began development in association with Certified Grocers, called the "mother" of the industry. In some cases the cooperatives were able to offer even lower prices to their members than competing chains could obtain. The District Court found that the cooperatives also provided their members with assistance in merchandising, advertising, promotions, inventory control, and even the financing of new entry.

price battles between them belie any suggestion that price competition in the area is even remotely threatened by a descent to the sort of consciously interdependent pricing that is characteristic of a market turning the corner toward oligopoly. The birth of dynamic new competitive forces—discount food houses and food departments in department stores, bantams and superettes, deli-liquor stores and drive-in dairies—promises unremitting competition in the future. In the more than four years following the merger, the District Court found not a shred of evidence that competition had been in any way impaired by the merger. Industry witnesses testified overwhelmingly to the same effect. By any realistic criterion, retail food competition in Los Angeles is today more intense than ever.

The harsh standard now applied by the Court to horizontal mergers may prejudice irrevocably the already difficult choice faced by numerous successful small and medium-sized businessmen in the myriad smaller markets where the effect of today's decision will be felt, whether to expand by buying or by building additional facilities.[33] And by foreclosing future sale as one attractive avenue of eventual market exit, the Court's decision may over the long run deter new market entry and tend to stifle the very competition it seeks to foster.

In a single sentence and an omnibus footnote at the close of its opinion, the Court pronounces its work consistent with the line of our decisions under § 7 since the passage of the 1950 amendment. The sole consistency that I can find is that in litigation under § 7, the Government always wins. The only precedent that is even within sight of today's holding is United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U. S. 321. In that case, in the interest of practical judicial administration, the Court proposed a simplified test of merger illegality: "[W]e think that a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, at 363.[34] The merger between Von's and Shopping Bag produced a firm with 1.4% of the grocery stores and 7.5% of grocery sales in Los Angeles, and resulted in an increase of 1.1% in the market share enjoyed by the two largest firms in the market and 3.3% in the market share of the six largest firms. The former two figures are hardly the "undue percentage" of the market, nor are the latter two figures the "significant increase" in concentration, that would make this merger inherently suspect under the standard of Philadelphia National Bank. Instead, the circumstances of the present

[34] In a footnote, the Court emphasized the corollary principle that, "if concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U. S. 321, 365, n. 42. That corollary, of course, has no application here, since the Los Angeles retail grocery market can in no sense be characterized as one in which "concentration is already great." Compare United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U. S. 271; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U. S. 441. The importance of a trend toward concentration in the particular industry in question was recognized in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U. S. 294, 332. See also Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 50 F. T. C. 555, 572–573; United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 168 F. Supp. 576, 604–607 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.); U. S. Atty. Gen. Nat. Comm. to Study the Antitrust Laws, Report 124 (1955).

merger fall far outside the simplified test established by that case for precisely the sort of merger here involved.[35]

The tests of illegality under § 7 were "intended to be similar to those which the courts have applied in interpreting the same language as used in other sections of the Clayton Act." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. In Philadelphia National Bank, the Court [35] As a result of the merger, the market share of the two largest firms increased from 14.4% to 15.5%, and the share of the six largest firms increased from 32.1% to 35.4%. The merger involved in Philadelphia National Bank produced a single firm controlling 30% of the market, and resulted in an increase of 33% in the market share of the two largest firms in the market. The Court's opinion is remarkable for its failure to support its conclusion by reference to even a single piece of economic theory. I shall not dwell here on the barometers of competition that have been proposed by various commentators. But it seems important to note that no test of which I am aware would invalidate the present merger. See, e. g., Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 133–136 (1959) (horizontal merger with direct competitor is prima facie unlawful where acquiring company accounts for 20% or more of the market, or where merging companies together constitute 20% or more of the market; acquisitions producing less than 20% market control unlawful only where special circumstances are present, such as serious barriers to entry or substantial influence on prices by the acquired company); Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust Policy, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 176, 179–182 (1955) (acquisition unlawful if it produces a combined market share of 20% or more; acquisition permitted if the combined share is less than 5–10%); Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 308–329 (1960) (no merger by the dominant firm in an industry if its market share is increased by more than 2–3%; no merger by other large firms in the industry where the combined market shares of the two-to-eight largest firms after the merger are increased by more than 7–8% over the shares that existed at any time during the preceding 5–10 years; no merger where acquired firm has 5% market share or more). See also Markham, Merger Policy Under the New Section 7: A Six Year Appraisal, 43 Va. L. Rev. 489, 521–522 (1957). The 40% rule promoted by the concurring opinion in the present case seems no more than an ad hoc endeavor to rationalize the holding of the Court.

was at pains to demonstrate that its conclusion was consistent with cases under § 3 of the Clayton Act. See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U. S. 321, 365–366. The Court disdains any such effort today. Untroubled by the language of § 7, its legislative history, and the cases construing either that section or any other provision of the antitrust laws, the Court grounds its conclusion solely on the impressionistic assertion that the Los Angeles retail food industry is becoming "concentrated" because the number of single-store concerns has declined.

The emotional impact of a merger between the third and sixth largest competitors in a given market, however fragmented, is understandable, but that impact cannot substitute for the analysis of the effect of the merger on competition that Congress required by the 1950 amendment. Nothing in the present record indicates that there is more than an ephemeral possibility that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition. Section 7 clearly takes "reasonable probability" as its standard. That standard has not been met here, and I would therefore affirm the judgment of the District Court.
